DRIVEN OUT OF THE STATE BY HIGH RATE OF TAXATION

Ohio Is Driving Nails In Its Own Industrial Casket—Two Hundred Business Men Were Told Monday Evening By the Secretary of the State Chamber of Commerce—The Speaker Commends the Legislature Which Did All They Could To Alleviate Conditions.

Ohio itself is driving the nails in its own industrial and commercial casket with the hammer of taxation.

This, in effect, was the message brought to nearly 200 business men of Columbus, at a luncheon Monday at the Neil House by George R. Chandler, secretary of the Ohio chamber of commerce.

Nothing can be done about the situation immediately, Mr. Chandler said, because of the constitutional provision that creates the fiction of uniform taxation, but before the next legislature meets, Ohio industry must make a scientific study of the state's taxation laws, so it won't go before the legislature blindfolded, as it has in the past.

Competition between states and competition between cities for commercial and industrial supremacy is the biggest problem facing the Ohio business man, Mr. Chandler declared. Citing numerous instances of backward steps in commerce and industry in Ohio, Mr. Chandler told his audience that Ohio is the loser because of its exorbitant taxation on commerce and industry.

The Youngstown Sheet and Tube Co., is spending hundreds of thousands of dollars for expansion, but not in Ohio, he said. The American Rolling Mills, with a factory in Columbus, is spending great sums of money for expansion of its Ashland, Kentucky, plant, but none in Ohio.

The United States Steel Corporation is spending millions of dollars for expansion of its Pittsburgh interests, but it spends none for development in Ohio, because its tax bill in Ohio would exceed the amount it pays in dividends, Mr. Chandler declared.

He mentioned another firm that was considering locating in an Ohio city, but was advised he said by a Cleveland law firm to stay out of Ohio. He offered to give the name of the firm and the city it was considering as its future home, if anyone cared to know it.

This taxation evil, he said, it not the fault of the Ohio legislature, Mr. Chandler said.

"I've worked with legislatures all over the country for the past 20 years in one capacity or other and I've never seen a fairer body of men than these in Ohio. They listened attentively to us as we presented our problems, during the last session, but each particular interest had its representative there, each asking that his particular wants be satisfied. The legislature did the best it could, under the circumstances," he said.

Mr. Chandler made it clear that the Ohio chamber of commerce is interested in this problem of commercial and industrial progress because "it is vital to Ohio" and he indicated that the scientific study of Ohio taxation laws will be made by the Ohio chamber.

He said he knew it was within the power of Ohio to "carry on" despite this handicap, "but we must look these facts squarely in the face."

Fred A. Miller, of Columbus, vice president of the Ohio chamber of commerce, was chairman of the meeting. Among those at the speakers' table were John J. Lentz, S. P. Bush, who also spoke, James A. Maddox, president of the Columbus chamber of commerce; and R. H. Schryver, president of the Citizens Trust & Savings bank.

PETER DODSON DEAD.

Peter Dodson, a former resident of Walnut township, died at his home near Canal Winchester at 4 o'clock Monday morning.

The deceased was nearly seventy-five years old. He is survived by his wife and one son, Charles Dodson, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

The funeral services will be held at the Lutheran church at Lithopolis Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

ARM SCALDED.

Timothy Wilson went to Columbus Tuesday to have his left arm examined by the medical department of the State Industrial commission. The member was scalded while at work at the Palace restaurant, recently.

Points Vary in Deer

The biological survey says that the age of deer cannot be computed by the number of points, since the number of points depends upon the condition and vigor of the deer. Deer develop more points after the age of three years and lose them when they have passed their prime.

Famous Horse Ranch Is Opened to the Public

The public will now have an opportunity to view the famous Kellogg ranch, at Pomona, Calif., where more than a quarter of a million dollars worth of Arabian horses are kept. W. K. Kellogg, the wealthy cereal manufacturer, has set aside a trust fund for the breeding of blooded horses on the ranch and its general upkeep. The photograph shows young Arabian fillies sprinting around the track at the ranch.

Major Morris Archer, of Westerville, district deputy of the Modern Woodman of America, ran into a pole north of Forest cemetery, Monday night about 9:30 while coming to this city, and wrecked his car, a Studebaker coupe. Mr. Archer was thrown against the steering wheel and badly bruised about the chest.

Dr. D. V. Courtright was called, and gave him surgical attention. The Albaugh ambulance made a hurry trip to the scene of the accident, but the injured man was brought in by his attending physician, and taken to the home of his friend, Major W. B. Cady, on South Scioto street.

The wrecked car was brought to this city by the Clifton Auto Sales company. The front of the car is badly stove in and it will require some time to make repairs.

Tunisians Turn to Terrible Tea Tippling

Tunis.—A mania for tea-drinking has become a social menace here that physicians are trying to combat. Tunisians are rapidly becoming lazy and losing their sleep and appetites because of the habit, medical authorities claim. One doctor says he found cases of nervousness and eye disorders known to have resulted from the constant consumption of the leaf. Last year Tunis used 1,100,000 kilos of tea, compared to almost none before the war. Natives are said to be spending their entire incomes and even pawning their possessions to get it.

YOUNG BOYS BOUND OVER GRAND JURY

Williamsport Lads Held on Charges of Theft—Guns, Watches and Hogs.

The village of Williamsport was all agog Monday over the arrest of three young men; Boone Hunter, aged 21; Wilbur Frazier, aged 16, son of Arthur Frazier, and Wayne Imler, aged 19, son of Clifford Imler. In a confession secured by Milton Cherryholmes, the boys told of a series of stealings, from the taking of guns and watches to hogs.

Hunter, it seems, was the leader of the bunch and directed the pilfering and the young boys were only tools of his and carried out his directions.

Hunter, who is a Kentuckian, is a recent comer in Deercreek township, and is now being held in the county jail on a failure to provide charge.

A warrant charging him with stealing hogs was filed against Hunter Monday by Harry McGhee.

A warrant was filed against Wilbur Frazier by Milt Cherryholmes, also for stealing hogs.

A warrant was filed against Wayne Imler by Joseph Schleich for stealing hogs.

These thefts of porkers, it is claimed occurred last year, about October 20. The young men had a hearing before Justice Freice. Hunter was bound over to the grand jury in the sum of $1,000 on a charge of breaking and entering a dwelling of A. B. Whitten, and being unable to give bond was placed in the county jail. Frazier and Imler were bound over to the grand jury in the sum of $500 each and as they are both under age their cases will be heard in the juvenile court.

The young men were brought to this city by their fathers. They have heretofore enjoyed excellent reputation. M. C. Seyfert represents Frazier and Richard Simkins represents Imler.

DRAIN LAKE TO GET TREASURE

Salvaging Ancient Ships of Caligula Is a Task for Hercules.

Washington.—Bringing out of the mysterious depths of Lake Nemi the two sunken ships of the Roman Emperor Caligula is a task for a modern Hercules, and Italian engineers have been carefully studying countless plans proposed by individuals from all over Europe.
Suggestions fall into two general classes, says Prof. William S. Messer of the classical department of Dartmouth college, who describes the situation in Art and Archeology. The first method would be to raise the sunken ships. This was attempted in 1439, when workmen with grappling hooks fished for one of the royal barges and succeeded only in tearing off part of the prow and sides. It was also tried in 1535 and in 1827, with further damage to the heavy, unmovable hulk.
Plan to Drain Lake.
The second type of plan seems more feasible, Professor Messer states, if the cost proves to be within reason. This method would involve draining the lake and removing the ships from the low meadow land of the lake bottom. The Alban lake, near by, has an outlet built by the Romans about 387 B. C.

"As this lake is 85 feet lower it may be possible, by transferring the waters of Nemi to it, to use this ancient wonder of Roman engineering for restoring to the modern world Roman Imperial barges," says Professor Messer.

"A tradition of a vessel of fabulous magnificence sunk in Lake Nemi persisted from Imperial times and was never wholly forgotten," he states. "Peasants fished over the spot for centuries and no one knows what prizes have been secretly recovered and sold."

Even as late as 1895 attempts were made to obtain bronze decorations, bits of marble flooring and other ornaments of the luxurious ship, but public sentiment began to protest against the destructiveness of the divers and now the commission appointed by the Italian government is determined that no program will be followed which will further endanger the historic Roman treasures.

The finding of an inscribed lead pipe in 1895 proved that the larger and better known ship belonged to the Emperor Caligula, rather than to Tiberius, to whom tradition attributed it.

Is Real Ship, Belief.
An Italian naval engineer who talked with the divers in 1895 concluded that this royal bark was a real ship with rudder and oars.

"Others are disinclined to believe this," Professor Messer says, "and hold, with the earlier investigator De Marchi, that it was, rather, a great float with elaborate superstructures, a palace, gardens, chapels, adorned with marbles, bronzes, precious stones and all the luxuries which the mad emperor knew so well how to employ."

"The answer to the questions awaits the report of the commission and the funds necessary to carry out the accepted plan."

Starving Family Shares Last Crust With Dog

New York.—All night long the whimpering of a dog had kept tenants of the front and rear buildings in a little street in New York city's tenement district on edge. It was the second night that the animal's cries had rent the silence, and the police were notified.

Two patrolmen traced the whimpering to the apartment of Mrs. Gussie Teszer, on the first floor. They knocked at the door. The only response was the intensified howling of the dog. They turned the knob and walked in.

A slight woman, pale, with feverish eyes, lay in one of the two beds. On the other side of the room, in another bed, lay two children, their faces wan and gaunt. They were Mrs. Teszer's children, Catherine, five, and Harry, nine.

The woman told police her husband had deserted them ten days before. For a week the three had had nothing to eat. The last morsel was a crust, which the children shared with their pet, the dog. The woman was taken to a hospital, and the children were placed in the care of a children's society.

Man's Bones Found in Mastodon Layer

Sagerton, Texas.—Bones which when put together form several complete skeletons of huge mastodons have been dug out of a grave pit near here during the last few weeks. In a deep layer of the bed and close to where mastodon bones were found, the skeleton of a man was unearthed a few days ago. The surroundings and other circumstances connected with the skeleton lead to the belief that it is that of a prehistoric man, dating back, perhaps, to the age of the mastodons.

SHORT STORIES OF THE BUCKEYE STATE

Lancastrian Schools in Ohio.
The expense entailed has always proved an obstacle to the establishment of educational facilities and their improvement, and the advocates of public schools in Ohio found such sentiment pretty strongly entrenched behind what was called the Lancastrian system of schools, which had been established in a number of places in the state, the chief recommendation of which was its cheapness of operation.

It was the monitorial plan which under various forms has appeared here and there all through the history of modern education. Joseph Lancaster, who was born in London, England, in 1778, merely improved upon the system already known as the Dr. Bell plan. Lancaster was a seaman in early life, but turning into philanthropic work he landed in the educational field with little preparation for the work.

By using the older and more capable pupils under him as teachers of the younger ones, without pay, of course, he contrived to press home to these monitors what they had been taught, as they themselves made use of their knowledge in teaching others. Being singularly qualified for such management, it was found that he was conducting a school of many hundred pupils, helped only by these pupil monitors, quite successfully, and at far less cost than such work had ever been done for before.

This attracted attention and many of the nobility became his patrons. A Royal Lancastrian society was formed and by it many schools were established and buildings erected. The system spread upon the continent and promised to come into general vogue, but just then Lancaster fell out with the chief supporters of the organization and came to America. This was about 1830. Lancastrian schools were established in New England, and soon the plan was being worked out west of the Alleghenies. A number of towns in Ohio had such schools, among them Cincinnati, Marietta and Hillsboro.

Lancaster himself was killed in an accident in New York City in 1838, and his family moving to Mexico City, the plan was tried out there and in some South American countries.—J. H. Galbraith in Columbus Dispatch.

Parisian Suit Is Winsome in Color

Smart and Varied Styles Are Offered by Designers This Season.

If this spring does not prove to be what the garment manufacturers call a "suit season," writes a Paris fashion authority in the New York Times, it will be because Paris has striven too industriously to make it so, designing so many—and all fascinating—types of suits that one is torn with the effort to choose between them and must needs turn to some other costume where the fashion rules of "you must or must not wear" are more clearly defined and therefore more easily followed.

To begin with there are the suits in tweeds, chevots and similar woollens, cut after the Norfolk pattern with shoulder yoke and straps running down, through which the belt is threaded. The skirts of these are most often box or group plaited, though Jean Patou manages a variation of the standard model by providing a wrapped skirt of brown and beige check for a Norfolk jacket of plain brown. Poirer takes a Norfolk jacket suit of pinkish beige laine, adds patch pockets of calfskin with zipper fastenings at top, a calfskin belt, a lining of Chinese red crepe de chine, and a sweater under the jacket, striped in Chinese red and purple. As a rule, however, these more or less tailored suits have blouses with turnover collars and one of the new frilly jabots in organdie or chiffon or crepe de chine.

Then there is the suit in black and white check that Louise Boulanger sponsors, a rather long jacket, collarless so that it encircles the base of the neck flatly and buttons on the left side, where a series of deep semi-circles scallop the overlapping edge of the jacket from neck to hem. Black buttons are set into the points of these scallops, and black edges each of the plaits that cluster on the front of the skirt.

Jauntiest of all are the little double-breasted yachting suits, copied as nearly as possible after the brilliant yachting suits that the European male permitted himself last summer. Double-breasted jackets of royal blue flannel, brave with gilt buttons, and wide trousers of pinkish beige or gray, reads the description of these surprising suits; and the same description, substituting a narrow wrapped skirt for trousers, applies for the feminine yachting suit this season. Redfern even borrows the masculine hat as well, providing his model with a soft fedora in beige, banded with royal blue.

For fear this smart little double-breasted jacket be condemned for appearing too often in the same colors, Lelong has made it up quite as attractively in dull red flannel with beige skirt; while Jane Regny makes it entirely in white flannel with the abundant gold buttons on pockets and back belt and an officer's white-crowned cap to lend authority to it all. With these dashing suits are worn white silk blouses with high turnover collars and appropriately colored ties.

Just as these suits are spirited and buoyant, so is a little bolero suit from Jane Regny demure. In the first place, it is made in a dull, French blue charmelaine, and the short bolero, scalloped about all its edges, was held in place only by a band that buttoned about the throat; the bolero hung open to show a double-breasted vest of white pique bearing a double row of buttons in the regulation vest manner.

The peplum, long foreign to our fashions, has come back with the waistline, and flares very becomingly on the new jacket suits of black taffeta seen in nearly every collection.

Black-and-White Mode Extends to Millinery

Crocheted straws are again in vogue and follow all the interesting lines of the new season to obtain smartness. Colors in both straws, grosgrains and felts are exceedingly beautiful and are varied. All the shades of blue for the spring, beige, green, black, rose tints and gray are smartly used for the newest hats. The popular combination of black and white has been used by Alice White, the motion picture player, for a becoming little turned-up brim type of hat that she wears in a scene from her film, "The Sea Tiger."

MUSSOLINI

Has Been Arrested Many Times As Dangerous Red.

Benito Mussolini, Dictator of Italy, is one of the few heads of governments, outside of Russia, who has a police record. For Mussolini, as is pointed out in an article in this week's Liberty, was an aggressive radical before the war and for his revolutionary activities served several jail sentences and paid many fines.

The official record of Mussolini's infractions of the Italian law, secretly copied by a well-known writer whose identity, for obvious reasons, is withheld, shows that the Italian Dictator's misdemeanors ranged from "making a public speech without due notice" to "threats with arms in hand."

On October 16, 1911, for instance, he was arrested on the occasion of a radical demonstration against the Italian expedition to Tripoli and accused of the following crimes: "1. Resistance to the public authorities and acts of violence against public officials. 2. Violent interference with the freedom of men called under arms. 3. The closing by violent means of industrial business and factories. 4. The stoppage by violent means of the tramways of the Romagna. 5. Damaging the telephone lines. 6. Damaging the state telegraph lines. 7. Forcing by violent means the stopping of a locomotive. 8. Placing a telegraph pole across a railway line, with danger to an express train."

His editorship of the radical paper, "Avanti," brought him into conflict with the authorities many times, during one of which Mussolini expressed the hope for "better days for the liberty of the press."

SULPHUR

Assists In Controlling Peach Scab and Brown Rot.

Spraying or dusting peaches with some form of sulphur, not lime-sulphur, when the husks are mostly off the young fruits will assist in controlling scab and brown rot. It is important that this be done as soon as the fruits are exposed by the shedding of their husks as they are then liable to attack by the fungi that cause these diseases.

For a liquid spray, some form of sulphur such as peach mix, dry mix, or dritomic sulphur is suggested by Curtis May, assistant plant pathologist at the Ohio Experiment Station. To control curculio also, add 1¼ pounds of arsenate of lead to each 50 gallons.

An 80-10-10 dust may be used successfully on peaches. This dust is made up of 80 pounds of superfine sulphur, 10 pounds of arsenate of hydrated lime, and 10 pounds of arsenate of lead. Dusting should be done when the air is quiet to insure that all parts of the tree are thoroughly coated with material.

Mr. May cautions against the use of liquid lime-sulphur or the ordinary dry lime-sulphur on peaches, as severe injury is likely to result.

Peach scab lives over winter in cankers on the twigs. Some of the spores that are produced in these cankers, fall on and infect the young twigs and fruits. Dry spots are produced on the fruit. These may coalesce and cover half the peach. Cracked fruits are also commonly due to scab.

Brown rot lives over winter on mummied fruits on the tree or ground as well as in cankers on the tree. Spores are produced and infect the fruit causing a soft rot. Brown rot is the common rot of ripe peaches.

It's a good investment to spend money for fire-fighting equipment. It would be a still better investment to spend money to prevent fires from starting. There never yet was a fire which did any damage before it started.

Synthetic Rubber

During the World war when Germany was cut off from supplies of crude rubber a great effort was made to produce synthetic rubber. Toward the close of the war about 150 tons of synthetic rubber were being produced monthly in Germany from isoprene derivatives, but the product was inferior to natural rubber and really served well only in hard-rubber goods. The industry ceased at the close of the war.

CITIES OF SUMERIA HIGHLY CIVILIZED

In an address before the British Association of Science, Professor Landon, noted archeologist, declared that science is reasonably certain that civilization originated in either Sumeria or Egypt, says the Pathfinder Magazine. His opinion is based upon the results of extensive excavations made under the auspices of the Oxford museum and the Field museum of Chicago. That Sumerian civilization originated at a very early date is shown by the excavations at Kish and Jemdet Nasr, two of the most famous of the ancient Sumerian cities. The finds included the earliest known monochrome and polychrome painted ware. Pictographic tablets, seals and copper objects of many kinds were found. The earliest of these date back to the greatest antiquity—just how far nobody has been able to ascertain; the latest date 3,000 years before the beginning of the Christian era. It is an interesting fact that both in Sumeria and Egypt the best art was always produced at the beginning of an era.

COWS SAVED OWNER FROM MOTHER BEAR

Climbing up a 60-foot spruce tree with a black mother bear close behind him, slashing at his feet as he ascended, Dave Irons, a rancher of Sickle, in the Caribou district of British Columbia, was saved from serious injury and possible death by his own cows, who came running and bellowing to his rescue just as Irons had reached the uppermost limb, says the Vancouver Province.

The bear had by this time lightened the farmer of his gum boots and had made several nasty gashes in his leg. The cows hearing their master's voice—he came regularly to put salt on their "trails"—gathered around the foot of the tree, distracting the bear's attention, and she descended hurriedly to protect two tiny cubs which had taken refuge in the second tree, close to the one Irons had climbed.

The rancher had met many bears before, but they had always turned off the trail at his approach. He has now increased the cows' salt allowance.

Learning His Location

"Yesterday a strange motorist came tearing into our progressive little city," said the landlady of the Petunia tavern. "He ran over a child, and then hit the town well and smashed the pump to atoms. He said he didn't know at first that he was in a town." "How did he learn the fact?" asked a guest.

"He found it out when Constable Slackputter arrested him for smashing the pump."—Kansas City Star.

"Scalp" Books

With the growth of gopher catching into business proportions in Marshall county, Kansas, trappers are using a really up-to-date system, says the Topeka Capital. The plan is to obtain sample books from tailor shops, remove the patches of cloth, and paste the scalps in rows in place of the cloth. A sample book holds 25 scalps to a page, and by looking over a sample card the county clerk can easily count the number.

Navajo Indians Afflicted

It is officially stated that the Navajo Indians are suffering from widespread trachoma, a disease which leads to blindness, and that probably one-third of the remaining members of this tribe are afflicted. A material affliction of this same tribe is the absence of good wells on their lands. Great areas are practically useless because of the lack of water.

Long Island Soil Rich

Long Island is a model place for market gardens, the soil being from two to six feet in depth, with enough phosphate to last under ordinary circumstances for about 40,000 years, and potash to last double that length of time, if estimates of soil conditions are correct as made by some experts.

The Fencebuster Returns

By AD SCHUSTE

(Copyright.)

MARIE, wife of "Fencebuster" Payne, held his letter in her lap and looked out of the window.

"It means more to him than he admits," she said. "A man at Bill's age does not like to think he is through. And he isn't, either"—she lifted her chin. "There is no reason, unless it is too much fame, for him to slide back."

Bill would be home in a few days, home from the big league for the winter and rest before the opening of the training season in the spring. It had been a poor year, he hinted in his letter, and his batting average had fallen behind. For a time there was doubt as to whether he would be asked to report for the training, but now, at least, that was settled.

"The old man says to show up," Bill wrote, "so I guess it depends on how I look against the youngsters whether or not I'll be traded to the bush."

The wife went out to the back yard to find young Bill, eleven-year-old worshiper of a ball player father, skinning the cat on a horizontal bar. Together they held a conference which resulted in a whoop of joy. Mother had offered to build the shed over into a gymnasium if Bill would organize an athletic club among the boys and agree to certain conditions. The carpenters had to rush to finish the building before the homecoming of the somewhat downcast "Fencebuster."

His first day home the hero spent with his feet on the table and his mind free from care. Next day he discovered the gymnasium.

"It's for Bill," the wife said. "He wanted to organize a club of boys; says he is going to be a great athlete like his father and I told him maybe you would see that an instructor was hired."

"Instructor? Who?"

"Well," the wife mentioned the one other big-league man the town possessed, "there was some talk of Fred Platman."

"Thought I was too old and fat, eh? Who said that Fred Platman was any more spruce than I? Do you mean to tell me you never once thought of me?" The demand was rough, but there was a pitiful appeal in the voice.

"Bill thought of you. He said he would not join the club unless you were instructor, but I thought maybe you would be too tired, or . . ."

"That's enough. I'm going to put these kids through their paces and I'll show them stunts Fred Platman never dreamed of."

The class started, and more than once big Bill, the "fencebuster," regretted his impulse. It was hard work doing these things which used to come so easily, and the boys were too quick in learning. Marie found him practicing by himself and several times had to remind their son of the promise made when the gymnasium was ordered. With his mind set to it and an applauding and admiring group of boys for stimulation, the Fencebuster held the job. There was talk of an exhibition by the class and then the announcement. Big Bill sent Fred Platman a complimentary ticket and laid a bet his rival would not attend. The weeks passed and at last came word that the ball player must report in the South for the training season.

"I'll make good," he said when he bade Marie farewell, "you see if I don't. Remember you thought I could not show those kids their stunts in the gym? Well, you were wrong, weren't you? Now watch my smoke!" And as he walked to the train slim of waist and light of step, a younger man than he had been in years, Marie knew he was right.

"I'll wait," she said, "until he has made good and then I'll tell him why I built the gymnasium and why I made the boys promise not to learn too quickly. He thinks he has trained them, and he has, perhaps, but they have done a whole lot more for him."

Tender Incident in "Old Hickory's Life"

Andrew Jackson, seventh President of the United States, had his moments of tenderness, in spite of his reputation for ferocity and hardness, points out Clifford Raymond in an article in Liberty. "In many cases in which hero worship involves a man of war," the writer explains, "there grows up, as a geranium bed alongside the slaughter house of his military operations, a legend of his private gentleness, which legend may contain fact." "Thomas Benton, a friend of Jackson's, relates in his 'Thirty Years' View' that one evening in February he called at the Hermitage, Jackson's home in Nashville, Tenn., and found Jackson at the fireside with his little adopted son and a lamb between his knees. The little boy had cried for the lamb because it was out in the cold, and Jackson had them both at the hearth."

LONG-HAIRED BEAUTY QUEEN CROWNED IN NEW YORK

Dorothy Britton, 19 year old dress-shop employe, has just won the title of "Miss New York" in America's latest and greatest beauty contest. She was selected by a committee of celebrated artists and experts from over 900 contestants from the great city, in a mammoth competition sponsored by the New York Mirror and Smart Set Magazine. Miss New York is now in Galveston competing in the International Beauty Pageant with beauties from all parts of the United States and several European countries. In spite of the fact that New York City is said to hold more beautiful women than any other city in the world, it has never yet won a national beauty contest. Miss Britton, the city's latest selection, is among the few beauties with long hair to enter important contests. She has never smoked, nor tasted liquor in her life; but drinks nine cups of black coffee a day without, she insists, any ill effects.

Origin of "Candidate"

The word "candidate" is derived from the Latin "candidus," meaning white. In Rome it was the custom for persons seeking office to appear in the Forum and other public places in white togas. Hence they came to be called "candidati," whence we get our "candidate."—Pathfinder Magazine.

Thawed by Electricity

Frozen water mains frequently are thawed out by electricity. In the dead of winter when all the houses in a section of the city find they cannot draw water at any of the faucets, the water department hears about it and appeals to the electric light and power company, which sends out an emergency crew. Electric power connections are made on hydrants at the two ends of the frozen section. The heat generated by the passage of the electricity through the pipes soon has water flowing freely again.

Gold Found in Iceland

What might be called a small "Klondike rush" has occurred in Iceland near Reikjavik, where an important deposit of gold has been discovered. Iceland was discovered more than a thousand years ago, but until recently it was not known that the island contained any gold deposits large enough to warrant development. There are 80,000 Icelanders and heretofore they have imported all their metals.

A Primitive Man

By MARTHA M. WILLIAMS

(Copyright.)

"ADAM delved, and Eve span—who was then the gentleman?" Jane flung at space generally. "I wish I had lived then—I like things simple."

"Yes, simplicity is your long suit—simplicity plus all the frills," Floy retorted.

"Don't be nasty, Floradora—spoils your picture. Almost makes you ugly," Jane countered with a roguish smile. "You are mad with me because I had rather dance to black Uncle Ned's fiddling than to the newest jazz."

"Tastes differ. 'Chicken in de bread tray,' I confess, does not inspire me. Indeed, I wonder anybody ever comes to a dance here."

"But you know you are quite mad about 'Ole Dan Tucker,'" Jane ran on, eyes twinkling, hard as she tried to look severe. To bait her step-sister mildly was her pet diversion. Floy was susceptible, and equally fickle, hence her emotional tempo varied, often from hour to hour. Just now she was particularly edged of mood. It was five o'clock. All afternoon she had been waiting for her newest affinity—now it was almost certain he would not come. It was aggravating—doubly so—with Pig Yardly phoning audaciously: "Unpack all the beauties, Jincy. See you in three shakes of a dead sheep's tail—along of a pal that's the goods—and then some."

"Where's his home and what's his name?" Jane demanded, to be answered by the click of hanging up.

"I am going out," Floy said bridling.

"Better not. Remember, two is company, three trumpery," artful Jane counseled. "I am sure to quarrel with Pig if the pal outshines him the least bit—and you know he is our dependence for tomorrow night—the Excellents will bar us out sure as we show up without a man to our name."

"Oh—darn everybody," said Floy, darting toward the door, which opened to show Pig Yardly, grinning like a joss, make-believe to drag forward some one tall, tanned, merry-eyed, wholly strange, evidently the pal. The pair stopped dead. After half a breath, Pig broke out: "How providential! What do you mean, Florrydory, hiding your light all this time? If I had been asked I would have laid long odds you didn't know a real swear word—no more than Jim Bacon here—his best cussing is 'Oh, peppermint, thunder and catnip.' Easy to see he needs you in his business—up in bluegrass he raises horses to run on the tracks, and mules to make the money he loses backing the racers. Once he has you to help with real able-bodied profanity, luck is bound to change."

"She shan't have him—if she did see him first—plain Jane has some few rights and means to stand up for them," that person broke out, frowning angrily at Pig. He sat her down, forcibly, saying: "You behave; show your raising. My Aunt Susan married your dad to see you had it."

"Be good, all of you if you intend to stay for supper—" Jane warned.

The meal was truly ambrosial, but Jimmy Bacon did not sense it—he sensed nothing, indeed, but Jane, plain Jane, with her red lips, her laughing eyes, her snowflake-falling feet, her voice of springtime, her laugh like silver bells. Profanation even to think of Pigs as her mate. Let him take Floy, the spitfire—she might stir him into being a real man. But for himself it was Jane.

Pig was not blind—two glances, casual listening, told him all he needed to know. But the knowledge affected neither his mood nor his appetite—he remained a noble trencherman to the bitter end. And when Thomas, hope of the good Excellents, tall, gangling, shy, painfully young, came in later to stammer through flooding blushes that his mother had agreed at last they might dance Thursday night, if Major Loveman could persuade Uncle Ned to come and fiddle, Pig rose, cut the pigeon wing, and shouted: "I'll bring him, Tommy, dead or alive."

"I'm coming after the girls—the young ladies—I mean Miss Jane and Florry," Tommy stammered, shaking visibly. Then up rose Pig to say in his deepest voice: "Got it all wrong, Tommy. You stick to the frying-size generation, at least until you've cut your eye-teeth and a mustache."

"He shan't spoil things for you—I'll give you the first dance and the last and a lot more," Jane cried, stepping to Tommy's side. Pig nodded approval, but Jimmy Bacon frowned in spite of trying to laugh as he said: "Please tell me, somebody, what do I get?"

"I do not," said Jimmy sternly.

"You're too curious," Pig scoffed. "If we let you alone you'll want to go back to Adam, and find out which won."

"I can answer that right off the reel," Jane said, nestling toward Jimmy's elbow. "Why, neither won. It is, you see, always so much easier to kiss and make up than to give in. Eves have never forgotten that—but Adams remember as it pleases them—or not at all."

"I won't ever forget," Jimmy said.

The Mighty Wheel

The wheel is considered by many as the greatest invention. Without it modern transportation and motive power would be impossible.

AMUSEMENTS

Lillian Gish has played her Romola and her White Sister, her Mimi and her Civil war heroine—but a new Lillian Gish astounded the audience at the Met theater last night when she played "Hester Prynne." She seemed literally inspired.

"The Scarlet Letter," Nathaniel Hawthorne's famous classic, proved an ideal vehicle for the famous star, its dramatic plot of a woman, carrying a brand of shame thru life for the sake of the man she loves, making a theme so powerful that it enabled her to rise to the heights of true genius.

But there was something else behind it all. For six years Miss Gish has longed to play this vivid role, as a monument in film to her ancestors. She comes of original Puritan stock, and is one of the leading members of the Daughters of the Revolution, and playing the role was to her almost a religious rite.

Gripping Performance

As the little seamstress whose great love caused her to rise to almost angelic heights, Miss Gish plays a mighty drama of love and human souls. Consummate artistry marks every phase of her struggle against intolerance and the mighty climax holds one spellbound. Those who loved her in "La Boheme" or "The White Sister" will adore her in her new role.

Lars Hanson, the famous Swedish actor makes an ideal "Arthur Dimmesdale," a role that required remarkable acting skill, and Henry B. Walthall celebrated his first picture with Miss Gish since "The Birth of a Nation" with a masterly portrayal of her Nemesis.

Karl Dane had a role even more distinctive than that in "The Big Parade" and others well cast were Marcelle Corday, Mary Hawes, little Joyce Coad, William H. Tooker, Jules Cowles and James A. Marcus. Victor Seastrom directed the production, which was lavishly staged, with striking originality, the opening scenes in the huge reproduction of a Puritan village being handled in a daring manner. The photography throughout has the quality of oil painting.

The production is her first Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer vehicle since "La-Boheme," and will form an interesting part of screen history.

Travel of Clock's Hands

In the southern hemisphere the shadow on a sundial travels counter clockwise. As the hands of the earliest clocks moved in the direction of a sundial shadow, our clocks would have hands moving from right to left if they had been first made in the southern hemisphere.

The Four Things That Matter.

There are four qualities we look for in a motor oil:

1. It must give perfect lubrication.
2. It must leave the engine in clean condition.
3. It must be free from impurities that damage the engine.

On these four counts we have chosen Sinclair Opaline Motor Oils and recommend them to our customers.

There are some strange tales of Broadway, but this true story is one of the strangest that we have heard:

Within one hour he lost his $1,500 in a gambling house, and remarked, "Well, such is life. It's another 15 years in the woods for me—but easy come, easy go."—The Outlook.

TRAIN RIDER INJURED--N. & W. ENGINEER SICK

Frank Lacey, of 12 Innis Avenue, Columbus, an employee of Sturtevant & Dillard, C. & H. contractors, boarded an N. & W. freight at Dorney Station Saturday afternoon and in alighting therefrom at Ritt's Siding in the rear of St. Joseph's cemetery to go to the camp on the Lindsey farm, landed upon his head instead of his feet, cutting an ugly gash over his right eye. Lacey was brought to the office of Dr. Lloyd Jones in South Court street, the local surgeon of the N. & W. for first aid and was sent home later in the evening. For a time it was feared that Lacey's eye had been injured.

Sunday night at 11 o'clock Dr. Jones was called to the N. & W. tower and gave first aid to a freight engineer suffering from the effects of kidney-stones. The train was taken into Columbus by the fireman.

BACHELORS ARE WORST DRIVERS

Why is it that they are constantly picking on the poor bachelor? Some one is always trying to place them in the wrong. The latest dig comes in a report made by the Accident Prevention Bureau of the insurance companies. This states that married men are better automobile drivers than single men. Or, to put it in a less pleasing manner, that single men are worse drivers than married men.

The statement is based on a study of several thousand automobile accidents in 1926. It shows that single men were involved in more than half of all the highway accidents. The theory is that the benedicts have more respect for authority, more mature judgment and a greater sense of responsibility than the apostles of single blessedness. To comment on this would be like trying to paint the lily. It is difficult to see what can be done about this unless we have laws forbidding single men to drive cars.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

The Scanty Exceptions

"The Oriental Grotto prob'ly won't be open tonight," said the landlord of the Torpidity tavern, in reply to the inquiry of a guest concerning the local temple of flicker. "You see, this is prayer meeting night and it's always closed on such nights, and when the Rebecca lodge meets or the ladies' aid gives an oyster supper or the Lyceum is going on and the nights once in a while when the young folks are tripping the light fantastic toe and on the rare occasions when the Sock and Bustin' Coteria presents a drama."

"Well, for goodness sake, when is it open?"

"On every other night except them I've mentioned, besides, of course, Sunday and when it storms."—Kansas City Star.

MRS. ARMSTRONG'S INJURIES SERIOUS

Dr. Geo. W. Heffner called on Mrs. Harley W. Armstrong at Grant Hospital, Columbus, yesterday. He reports her condition as serious, suffering from a concussion of the brain, broken arm and three broken ribs and severe burns on the back from gasoline. Mrs. Armstrong was injured in an auto collision on the Adelphi pike one-half mile east of this city Friday evening when the car in which she was returning to her home in Laurelville in company with her husband, daughter and Miss Margaret Williamson, was struck by the car driven by Forrest Hunt of this city. Her daughter, Miss Violet, is also a patient at the hospital, suffering from a broken malar bone which it is feared, will prove a permanent facial injury.

Miss Amber and the Mask Ball

By JOHN OLCOTT

(Copyright.)

"AND, now, Miss Amber, honey," said Aunt Chloe's mellow voice, "Now that Mrs. Judge Hollis has telephoned that you're to come to her quite informal mask ball this evening, what you goin' to weah, Miss Amber?"

Amber Mayland looked up from the portrait she was painting in the great dining room at Maylands, which she had turned into a studio. "Why, Aunt Chloe," she said with a tiny wistful note in her sweet voice, "I am afraid I can't go—I haven't a thing to wear."

Chloe stood there, glumly, forgetting her own disappointment in the disaster that was befalling a "Mayland" of the bluest blood in the whole South. Presently, she turned away and passing through empty rooms and echoing halls, for she and Amber Mayland lived in the east wing of the decaying house, Aunt Chloe finally reached the vast garret that covered the great house, and which was packed full of antiques that would have brought a fortune if they were put on the market.

Of course when Amber was in Paris she had met one of the Mayland kin—who had ordered a copy of the portrait of Lady Amber Mayland, who had been Amber's beautiful ancestress, and a great belle. It was this portrait that Amber was copying now, and she did not stop until once more she heard the ponderous footsteps of the big woman, who now stood before her with a carefully dusted small hair trunk in her grasp. She dropped it on the polished floor and folded her arms.

Amber leaned over and read the inscription, that was put on the top of the trunk with small brass nails: "Lady Amber Mayland—Her trunk—1776."

"Now," uttered Chloe triumphantly, "who says you can't go to the mask ball, Miss Amber?"

"Of course I shall go, Chloe! I must make a mask of black silk—and we will have to walk, Chloe."

When Amber was dressed, the old servant hovered about her ecstatically, for never had Amber Mayland looked more beautiful, and even her own mirror told her that she was the living image of her ancestress, Lady Amber Mayland of London.

And after Chloe had carefully locked up the big house, they walked down the driveway, Amber wearing a Chinese crepe shawl wrapped around her, with one point falling over her powdered hair, and her little white slippers thrust into high black satin party boots. Aunt Chloe looked immaculate in starched white linen, with a white handkerchief bound around her head, and strutted on ahead of Amber with an air of great importance. Presently, carriages and motor cars passed them, many of them stopping to invite Amber and Chloe to ride, but the girl laughingly refused all invitations. As soon as they reached the grounds of the Hollis place, Amber adjusted her tiny black silk mask, saw that the little black patches were still affixed to chin and curve of temple. It seemed so like old times to be carefree and go to dances, as she used to do in the old days, when her parents were living, and before Phil DeMar had engaged himself to Mollie Jenkins, the rich speculator's daughter! It would seem odd to go to a dance without Phil's merry companionship.

From the very beginning, Amber knew that so far as she was concerned, the ball was to be a huge success. There was one tall slim man whose steely strength, and whose gray eyes through his scarlet mask thrilled Amber to the core. His costume was that of Mephisto, and soon she was aware that he was never far away from her. He did not dance very much, but his name was down on her card three times—for the first dance and the last two.

Many of her other partners she recognized as old friends.

It was the last dance, and Mephisto finally led Amber into the moonlighted veranda where he found seats in a shaded corner.

"I don't want to unmask," said Amber, "I love this romantic ignorance of my neighbors."

"That is true," he admitted. Then, suddenly, "Will you unmask out here, Amber, I must have a word with you!"

"Your eyes and voice remind me of an old friend—but I would rather not know," she quavered, and then Mephisto lifted his hands and removed his red mask and tossed back his head, hooded in red. He smiled at her.

"Phil!" she gasped. He nodded. "Have you heard, Amber, how Miss Jenkins ran away with a handsome chauffeur?"

"I am glad," she whispered, and then he said:

"Be glad for us both, darling Amber! Forgive me running after the fleshpots—I have never been happy for one hour since we parted—could you learn to care for me, Amber? I have learned to work, and earn money for us both, dear—you need not be afraid—can you love me?"

"Ah, Philip, I have never ceased to care!" Still later, Phil drove Amber home in his big car, but Chloe, sitting alone in the tonneau, went promptly to sleep, for she believed the whole thing was a dream, until they arrived at Maylands and realized the glorious reality.

"THE VILLAGE BLACKSMITH"

Was Written a Year Before It Was Published.

Longfellow wrote the poem of "The Village Blacksmith," more than a year before it appeared in print and when it was about to appear he wrote to his father: "My pen has not been very prolific of late; only a little poetry has trickled from it. There will be a kind of a ballad on a blacksmith in the next 'Knickerbocker,' (November, 1840), which you may consider as a song in praise of your ancestor at Newbury" (the first Stephen Longfellow).

The suggestion of the poem came from the smithy which the poet passed daily, and which stood beneath a horse-chestnut tree not far from his home in Cambridge.

The tree, against the protests of Longfellow and others, was removed in 1876 on the ground that it imperilled the drivers of heavy loads who passed under it.

On February 27, 1879, the poet's seventy-second birthday, the children of Cambridge presented him with an armchair made from the wood of this chestnut tree. Longfellow wrote a poem the same day commemorating the event.

"Good Old Names" Listed

KILLING THE FARMER'S FRIEND

When an Iowa farmer complained that the pheasants were eating his corn, the game department killed two of the birds, examined their crops and found 200 cut worms—and no corn. Almost without exception, when the scientists investigate such cases they find the same result. The farmer owes his crop to the feathered police that keep down the bugs, insects and worms. With continuing slaughter of every form of bird life, the insect loss will be heavier and farm work harder. The nation could train an army of riflemen in a short time, but it couldn't in a century restore the bird armies that are the farmers' allies in raising food to feed the country.

MAYTAG DEALER MOVEMENT INAUGURATES NEW BUSINESS ERA

Association Upsets All Precedents and Is of Such Scope That It Is Destined To Be Felt In All Corners of the Country—Founded Primarily For Service and Propagation of the Maytag Washday Helpfulness To All the World.

Dixon, Indianapolis, Indiana, National Vice President also President of Division C. C. A. Poole, St. Louis, Missouri, National Chairman, Territory and Finance Committee, also President Division E.

A radically new merchandising movement was organized May 6 at Indianapolis. The movement is of such scope that it is destined to be felt in all corners of the business world. It is so comprehensive and founded on such substantial principles that its effects will be apparent immediately. As the movement grows it is bound to influence the trend of modern business methods to the extent that revolutionary changes in marketing methods may occur in many industries.

The Indianapolis Branch, Maytag Dealers' association is the new movement. The association was formed at special convention of Maytag dealers, held in Indianapolis, May 6, and marks the inauguration of a new era in merchandising history. Never before have dealers for a nationally known product attempted to associate themselves or been permitted to associate themselves for the advancement of their own interests and their customers' interests. Heretofore all organizing and systematizing has been on the part of the manufacturer or the distributor and the dealer and consumer have had only such share in the activities as were allotted to them.

The new association upsets all such precedents. It will function as an independent dealer association having for its principal objects the unification of dealer interests and the simplification of distribution, operation and costs; the ultimate benefits being passed on to the consumer. The Maytag Dealers' association is founded primarily for service and the propagation of the Maytag message of washday helpfulness to all the world. It is further expected that the closer cooperation which will result between the dealers and the Maytag company will promote a state of dealer and consumer satisfaction which cannot but reflect itself in enormous sales increases of Maytag Washers.

The Indianapolis Branch Maytag Dealers' association is the achievement of George Rhodes, manager of the Indianapolis Branch of the Maytag company. Despite the sensational success of the Indianapolis Branch of the Maytag company, which in sales increases parallels and even exceeds the phenomenal sales record of the Maytag company itself—a sales increase of 5,200 per cent in six years—Mr. Rhodes realized that systematization and coordination of dealers by the manufacturer and branches have a natural limit of effectiveness. To achieve maximum heights of dealer interest and efficiency further dealer efforts should come from the dealers themselves. From idea to action is but a quick step for Mr. Rhodes, and accordingly the Indianapolis Branch Maytag Dealers' association was organized at an enthusiastic meeting of Maytag dealers at Indianapolis, May 6.

F. L. Maytag, president of the board of directors of the Maytag company, whose career is one of the remarkable merchandising successes of the age, was present to meet the new dealer organization. He expressed himself as greatly and pleasantly surprised at the overwhelming enthusiasm with which the dealers perfected the new organization and spirit of the token of cooperation pledged him.

The new Maytag Dealer association is at present operative only in Indianapolis Maytag territory comprising the states of Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky and Eastern Missouri, but it is anticipated that the new merchandising movement will spread to include not only the entire Maytag national dealer organization, but dealer organizations in other industries as well.

National officers elected at the Indianapolis meeting who will have charge of the welfare and progress of the new dealer association, both nationally and locally, are men prominent in merchandising circles and community affairs. They are as follows:

F. E. Davenny, Ashtabula, Ohio, National President Indianapolis Branch Maytag Dealers' association, also president of division B—a territorial unit of the Indianapolis Branch comprising Eastern Ohio.

T. F. Dixon, Indianapolis, Indiana, National Vice President Indianapolis Branch Maytag Dealers' association, also president of division C—comprising Northeastern Indiana, Northwestern Ohio and Southern Michigan.

Charles Kratsch, Chicago, Illinois, National Secretary and Treasurer, Indianapolis Maytag Dealers' association, also president of division D—comprising Northwestern Indiana and Northern Illinois.

H. R. Gustafson, Columbus, Ohio, National Chairman Operating, Program and Quotas committee, also president of division F—comprising Southeastern Indiana, Southwestern Ohio, Eastern and Central Kentucky.

C. A. Poole, St. Louis, Missouri, National Chairman Territory and Finance committee, also president of division E—comprising Southwestern Indiana, Western Kentucky, Eastern Missouri and Central and Southern Illinois.

INDUSTRIES SEEK OTHER LOCATIONS

DRIVEN OUT OF THE STATE BY HIGH RATE OF TAXATION

Ohio Is Driving Nails In Its Own Industrial Casket—Two Hundred Business Men Were Told Monday Evening By the Secretary of the State Chamber of Commerce—The Speaker Commends the Legislature Which Did All They Could To Alleviate Conditions.

Ohio itself is driving the nails in its own industrial and commercial casket with the hammer of taxation.

This, in effect, was the message brought to nearly 200 business men of Columbus, at a luncheon Monday at the Neil House by George R. Chandler, secretary of the Ohio chamber of commerce.

Nothing can be done about the situation immediately, Mr. Chandler said, because of the constitutional provision that creates the fiction of uniform taxation, but before the next legislature meets, Ohio industry must make a scientific study of the state's taxation laws, so it won't go before the legislature blindfolded, as it has in the past.

Competition between states and competition between cities for commercial and industrial supremacy is the biggest problem facing the Ohio business man, Mr. Chandler declared.

Citing numerous instances of backward steps in commerce and industry in Ohio, Mr. Chandler told his audience that Ohio is the loser because of its exorbitant taxation on commerce and industry.

The Youngstown Sheet and Tube Co., is spending hundreds of thousands of dollars for expansion, but not in Ohio, he said. The American Rolling Mills, with a factory in Columbus, is spending great sums of money for expansion of its Ashland, Kentucky, plant, but none in Ohio.

The United States Steel Corporation is spending millions of dollars for expansion of its Pittsburgh interests, but it spends none for development in Ohio, because its tax bill in Ohio would exceed the amount it pays in dividends, Mr. Chandler declared.

He mentioned another firm that was considering locating in an Ohio city, but was advised he said by a Cleveland law firm to stay out of Ohio. He offered to give the name of the firm and the city it was considering as its future home, if anyone cared to know it.

This taxation evil, he said, it not the fault of the Ohio legislature, Mr. Chandler said.

"I've worked with legislatures all over the country for the past 20 years in one capacity or other and I've never seen a fairer body of men than these in Ohio. They listened attentively to us as we presented our problems, during the last session, but each particular interest had its representative there, each asking that his particular wants be satisfied. The legislature did the best it could, under the circumstances," he said.

Mr. Chandler made it clear that the Ohio chamber of commerce is interested in this problem of commercial and industrial progress because "it is vital to Ohio" and he indicated that the scientific study of Ohio taxation laws will be made by the Ohio chamber.

He said he knew it was within the power of Ohio to "carry on" despite this handicap, "but we must look these facts squarely in the face."

Fred A. Miller, of Columbus, vice president of the Ohio chamber of commerce, was chairman of the meeting. Among those at the speakers' table were John J. Lentz, S. P. Bush, who also spoke, James A. Madrox, president of the Columbus chamber of commerce; and R. H. Schryver, president of the Citizens Trust & Savings bank.

PETER DODSON DEAD.

Peter Dodson, a former resident of Walnut township, died at his home near Canal Winchester at 4 o'clock Monday morning.

The deceased was nearly seventy-five years old. He is survived by his wife and one son, Charles Dodson, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

The funeral services will be held at the Lutheran church at Lithopolis Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

ARM SCALDED.

Timothy Wilson went to Columbus Tuesday to have his left arm examined by the medical department of the State Industrial commission. The member was scalded while at work at the Palace restaurant, recently.

AUTOMOBILE STRUCK POLE WAS WRECKED

Major Morris Archer Badly Bruised and Taken to Home of Major W. B. Cady.

Major Morris Archer, of Westerville, district deputy of the Modern Woodman of America, ran into a pole north of Forest cemetery, Monday night about 9:30 while coming to this city, and wrecked his car, a Studebaker coupe. Mr. Archer was thrown against the steering wheel and badly bruised about the chest.

Dr. D. V. Courtright was called, and gave him surgical attention. The Albaugh ambulance made a hurry trip to the scene of the accident, but the injured man was brought in by his attending physician, and taken to the home of his friend, Major W. B. Cady, on South Scioto street.

The wrecked car was brought to this city by the Clifton Auto Sales company. The front of the car is badly stove in and it will require some time to make repairs.

Tunisians Turn to Terrible Tea Tipping

Tunis.—A mania for tea-drinking has become a social menace here that physicians are trying to combat. Tunisians are rapidly becoming lazy and losing their sleep and appetites because of the habit, medical authorities claim. One doctor says he found cases of nervousness and eye disorders known to have resulted from the constant consumption of the leaf. Last year Tunis used 1,100,000 kilos of tea, compared to almost none before the war. Natives are said to be spending their entire incomes and even pawning their possessions to get it.

YOUNG BOYS BOUND OVER GRAND JURY

Williamsport Lads Held on Charges of Theft—Guns, Watches and Hogs.

The village of Williamsport was all agog Monday over the arrest of three young men; Boone Hunter, aged 21; Wilbur Frazier, aged 16, son of Arthur Frazier, and Wayne Imler, aged 19, son of Clifford Imler. In a confession secured by Milton Cherryholmes, the boys told of a series of stealings, from the taking of guns and watches to hogs.

Hunter, it seems, was the leader of the bunch and directed the pilfering and the young boys were only tools of his and carried out his directions.

Hunter, who is a Kentuckian, is a recent comer in Deercreek township, and is now being held in the county jail on a failure to provide charge.

A warrant charging him with stealing hogs was filed against Hunter Monday by Harry McGhee.

A warrant was filed against Wilbur Frazier by Milt Cherryholmes, also for stealing hogs.

A warrant was filed against Wayne Imler by Joseph Schleich for stealing hogs.

These thefts of porkers, it is claimed occurred last year, about October 20. The young men had a hearing before Justice Freice. Hunter was bound over to the grand jury in the sum of $1,000 on a charge of breaking and entering a dwelling of A. B. Whitten, and being unable to give bond was placed in the county jail. Frazier and Imler were bound over to the grand jury in the sum of $500 each and as they are both under age their cases will be heard in the juvenile court.

The young men were brought to this city by their fathers. They have heretofore enjoyed excellent reputation. M. C. Seyfert represents Frazier and Richard Simkins represents Imler.

Unearthing of the ruins has increased interest in proposed research on the site of the ancient Greek colonies in the Crimea. The soviet government has created a special fund for this work and has invited French and German archeologists to take part in it.

Developed Steam Engine

Thomas Newcomen, a locksmith of Dartmouth, in Devonshire, England, may fairly be said to have been the first to put the steam engine to practical use. The steam engine for which he took out a patent in 1705 remained the type in use for pumping water out of the Cornish mines till toward the end of the century, when Watt added the condenser.

Points Vary in Deer

The biological survey says that the age of deer cannot be computed by the number of points, since the number of points depends upon the condition and vigor of the deer. Deer develop more points after the age of three years and lose them when they have passed their prime.

DRAIN LAKE TO GET TREASURE
Salvaging Ancient Ships of Caligula Is a Task for Hercules.

Washington.—Bringing out of the mysterious depths of Lake Nemi the two sunken ships of the Roman Em-peror Caligula is a task for a modern Hercules, and Italian engineers have been carefully studying countless plans proposed by individuals from all over Europe.
Suggestions fall into two general classes, says Prof. William S. Messer of the classical department of Dart-mouth college, who describes the situ-ation in Art and Archeology. The first method would be to raise the sunken ships. This was attempted in 1439, when workmen with grappling hooks fished for one of the royal barges and succeeded only in tearing off part of the prow and sides. It was also tried in 1535 and in 1827, with further damage to the heavy, un-movable hulk.
Plan to Drain Lake.
The second type of plan seems more feasible, Professor Messer states, if the cost proves to be within reason. This method would involve draining the lake and removing the ships from the low meadow land of the lake bot-tom. The Alban lake, near by, has an outlet built by the Romans about 387 B. C.
"As this lake is 85 feet lower it may be possible, by transferring the waters of Nemi to it, to use this an-cient wonder of Roman engineering for restoring to the modern world Roman Imperial barges," says Pro-fessor Messer.
"A tradition of a vessel of fabulous magnificence sunk in Lake Nemi per-sisted from imperial times and was never wholly forgotten," he states. "Peasants fished over the spot for centuries and no one knows what prizes have been secretly recovered and sold."
Even as late as 1895 attempts were made to obtain bronze decorations, bits of marble flooring and other orna-ments of the luxurious ship, but public sentiment began to protest against the destructiveness of the divers and now the commission appointed by the Ital-ian government is determined that no program will be followed which will further endanger the historic Roman treasures.
The finding of an inscribed lead pipe in 1895 proved that the larger and better known ship belonged to the Emperor Caligula, rather than to Tiberius, to whom tradition attrib-uted it.

Is Real Ship, Belief.
An Italian naval engineer who talked with the divers in 1895 concluded that this royal bark was a real ship with rudder and oars.
"Others are disinclined to believe this," Professor Messer says, "and hold, with the earlier investigator De Marchi, that it was, rather, a great float with elaborate superstructures, a palace, gardens, chapels, adorned with marbles, bronzes, precious stones and all the luxuries which the mad emperor knew so well how to em-ploy."
"The answer to the questions awaits the report of the commission and the funds necessary to carry out the ac-cepted plan."

Starving Family Shares Last Crust With Dog
New York.—All night long the whim-pering of a dog had kept tenants of the front and rear buildings in a little street in New York city's tenement district on edge. It was the second night that the animal's cries had rent the silence, and the police were not-ified.
Two patrolmen traced the whimper-ing to the apartment of Mrs. Gussie Teszer, on the first floor. They knocked at the door. The only re-sponse was the intensified howling of the dog. They turned the knob and walked in.
A slight woman, pale, with feverish eyes, lay in one of the two beds. On the other side of the room, in another bed, lay two children, their faces wan and gaunt. They were Mrs. Teszer's children, Catherine, five, and Harry, nine.
The woman told police her husband had deserted them ten days before. For a week the three had had nothing to eat. The last morsel was a crust, which the children shared with their pet, the dog. The woman was taken to a hospital, and the children were placed in the care of a children's so-ciety.

Man's Bones Found in Mastodon Layer
Sagerton, Texas.—Bones which when put together form several complete skeletons of huge mas-todons have been dug out of a grave pit near here during the last few weeks. In a deep layer of the bed and close to where mastodon bones were found, the skeleton of a man was unearthed a few days ago. The surround-ings and other circumstances connected with the skeleton lead to the belief that it is that of a prehistoric man, dating back, perhaps, to the age of the mas-todons.

SHORT STORIES OF THE BUCKEYE STATE
Lancastrian Schools in Ohio.
The expense entailed has al-ways proved an obstacle to the establishment of educational fa-cilities and their improvement, and the advocates of public schools in Ohio found such senti-ment pretty strongly entrenched behind what was called the Lan-castrian system of schools, which had been established in a number of places in the state, the chief recommendation of which was its cheapness of operation.
It was the monitorial plan which under various forms has appeared here and there all through the history of modern education. Joseph Lancaster, who was born in London, Eng-land, in 1778, merely improved upon the system already known as the Dr. Bell plan. Lancaster was a seaman in early life, but turning into philanthropic work he landed in the educational field with little preparation for the work.
By using the older and more capable pupils under him as teachers of the younger ones, without pay, of course, he con-tributed to press home to these monitors what they had been taught, as they themselves made use of their knowledge in teach-ing others. Being singularly qualified for such management, it was found that he was conducting a school of many hundred pupils, helped only by these pupil mon-itors, quite successfully, and at far less cost than such work had ever been done for before.
This attracted attention and many of the nobility became his patrons. A Royal Lancastrian society was formed and by it many schools were established and buildings erected. The sys-tem spread upon the continent and promised to come into gen-eral vogue, but just then Lan-caster fell out with the chief sup-porters of the organization and came to America. This was about 1830. Lancastrian schools were established in New England, and soon the plan was being worked out west of the Alleghenies. A number of towns in Ohio had such schools, among them Cincin-nati, Marietta and Hillsboro.

Lancaster himself was killed in an accident in New York City in 1838, and his family moving to Mexico City, the plan was tried out there and in some South American countries.—J. H. Gal-braith in Columbus Dispatch.

Firestone Round Tread Balloon
MANY Firestone Dealers are prepared to take in your old tires, offering you a liberal allowance on a new set of Gum-Dipped Balloons.
Firestone Dealers are given the advantages of at-tending Tire Educational Meetings held throughout the country, where tire design and construction are discussed. The sections of used tires reproduced here are a part of this program. Study these two sections and you, too, will understand what Firestone means by tires built for service and tires made to sell.

Note unbalanced tread with uneven wear—excess rubber at shoulders wasted, stiffening tire, making it harder riding a. 1 harder steering.

Note how hinging action at heavy shoulder causes ply separation and broken carcass.

"Made to Sell"

Flat Tread Balloon
The balloon tire with heavy, flat tread design is ob-viously stiffer and rides harder. The excess rubber, placed for appearance at the edges of the tread, is not only wasted but produces hinging action causing ply separa-tion and "shoulder breaks."
Firestone designed and manufactures Oldfield Tires and Tubes, distributing them direct to Firestone Dealers only, through 148 Factory Warehouses. This efficient and economical distribution assures tire buyers' everywhere, clean, fresh stocks of Firestone and Oldfield Tires in all types and sizes, and has helped to make possible today's remarkably low prices—the lowest in tire history. Parisian Suit Is Winsome in Color

Smart and Varied Styles Are Offered by Designers This Season.

If this spring does not prove to be what the garment manufacturers call a "suit season," writes a Paris fashion authority in the New York Times, it will be because Paris has striven too industriously to make it so, designing so many—and all fascinating—types of suits that one is torn with the effort to choose between them and must needs turn to some other costume where the fashion rules of "you must or must not wear" are more clearly defined and therefore more easily followed.

To begin with there are the suits in tweeds, chevots and similar woollens, cut after the Norfolk pattern with shoulder yoke and straps running down, through which the belt is threaded. The skirts of these are most often box or group plaited, though Jean Patou manages a variation of the standard model by providing a wrapped skirt of brown and beige check for a Norfolk jacket of plain brown. Poirot takes a Norfolk jacket suit of pinkish beige laine, adds patch pockets of calfskin with zipper fastenings at top, a calfskin belt, a lining of Chinese red crepe de chine, and a sweater under the jacket, striped in Chinese red and purple. As a rule, however, these more or less tailored suits have blouses with turnover collars and one of the new frilly jabots in organdie or chiffon or crepe de chine.

Then there is the suit in black and white check that Louise Boulanger sponsors, a rather long jacket, collarless so that it encircles the base of the neck flatly and buttons on the left side, where a series of deep semi-circles scallop the overlapping edge of the jacket from neck to hem. Black buttons are set into the points of these scallops, and black edges each of the plaits that cluster on the front of the skirt.

Jauntiest of all are the little double-breasted yachting suits, copied as nearly as possible after the brilliant yachting suits that the European male permitted himself last summer. Double-breasted jackets of royal blue flannel, brave with gilt buttons, and wide trousers of pinkish beige or gray, reads the description of these surprising suits; and the same description, substituting a narrow wrapped skirt for trousers, applies for the feminine yachting suit this season. Redfern even borrows the masculine hat as well, providing his model with a soft fedora in beige, banded with royal blue.

For fear this smart little double-breasted jacket be condemned for appearing too often in the same colors, Lelong has made it up quite as attractively in dull red flannel with beige skirt; while Jane Regny makes it entirely in white flannel with the abundant gold buttons on pockets and back belt and an officer's white-crowned cap to lend authority to it all. With these dashing suits are worn white silk blouses with high turnover collars and appropriately colored ties.

Just as these suits are spirited and buoyant, so is a little bolero suit from Jane Regny demure. In the first place, it is made in a dull, French blue charmelaine, and the short bolero, scalloped about all its edges, was held in place only by a band that buttoned about the throat; the bolero hung open to show a double-breasted vest of white pique bearing a double row of buttons in the regulation vest manner. The peplum, long foreign to our fashions, has come back with the waistline, and flares very becomingly on the new jacket suits of black taffeta seen in nearly every collection.

Black-and-White Mode Extends to Millinery

Crocheted straws are again in vogue and follow all the interesting lines of the new season to obtain smartness. Colors in both straws, grosgrains and felts are exceedingly beautiful and are varied. All the shades of blue for the spring, beige, green, black, rose tints and gray are smartly used for the newest hats. The popular combination of black and white has been used by Alice White, the motion picture player, for a becoming little turned-up brim type of hat that she wears in a scene from her film, "The Sea Tiger."

MUSSOLINI

Has Been Arrested Many Times As Dangerous Red.

Benito Mussolini, Dictator of Italy, is one of the few heads of governments, outside of Russia, who has a police record. For Mussolini, as is pointed out in an article in this week's Liberty, was an aggressive radical before the war and for his revolutionary activities served several jail sentences and paid many fines.

The official record of Mussolini's infractions of the Italian law, secretly copied by a well-known writer whose identity, for obvious reasons, is withheld, shows that the Italian Dictator's misdemeanors ranged from "making a public speech without due notice" to "threats with arms in hand."

On October 16, 1911, for instance, he was arrested on the occasion of a radical demonstration against the Italian expedition to Tripoli and accused of the following crimes: 1. Resistance to the public authorities and acts of violence against public officials. 2. Violent interference with the freedom of men called under arms. 3. The closing by violent means of industrial business and factories. 4. The stoppage by violent means of the tramways of the Romagna. 5. Damaging the telephone lines. 6. Damaging the state telegraph lines. 7. Forcing by violent means the stopping of a locomotive. 8. Placing a telegraph pole across a railway line, with danger to an express train.

His editorship of the radical paper, "Avanti," brought him into conflict with the authorities many times, during one of which Mussolini expressed the hope for "better days for the liberty of the press."

SULPHUR

Assists In Controlling Peach Scab and Brown Rot.

Spraying or dusting peaches with some form of sulphur, not lime-sulphur, when the husks are mostly off the young fruits will assist in controlling scab and brown rot. It is important that this be done as soon as the fruits are exposed by the shedding of their husks as they are then liable to attack by the fungi that cause these diseases.

For a liquid spray, some form of sulphur such as peach mix, dry mix, or dritomic sulphur is suggested by Curtis May, assistant plant pathologist at the Ohio Experiment Station. To control curculio also, add 1 1/4 pounds of arsenate of lead to each 50 gallons.

An 80-10-10 dust may be used successfully on peaches. This dust is made up of 80 pounds of superfine sulphur, 10 pounds of arsenate of hydrated lime, and 10 pounds of arsenate of lead. Dusting should be done when the air is quiet to insure that all parts of the tree are thoroughly coated with material.

Mr. May cautions against the use of liquid lime-sulphur or the ordinary dry lime-sulphur on peaches, as severe injury is likely to result.

Peach scab lives over winter in cankers on the twigs. Some of the spores that are produced in these cankers, fall on and infect the young twigs and fruits. Dry spots are produced on the fruit. These may coalesce and cover half the peach. Cracked fruits are also commonly due to scab.

Brown rot lives over winter on mummied fruits on the tree or ground as well as in cankers on the tree. Spores are produced and infect the fruit causing a soft rot. Brown rot is the common rot of ripe peaches.

Ounce of Prevention

It's a good investment to spend money for fire-fighting equipment. It would be a still better investment to spend money to prevent fires from starting. There never yet was a fire which did any damage before it started.

Largest of Chipmunks

Townsend's chipmunk is the darkest of the many species of chipmunk in the western states and ranges along the Pacific coast. It is distinctly larger and stronger than its relatives, says Nature Magazine. Chipmunks carry their stores in cheek pouches to some specially selected spot, where they leisurely enjoy their meal and leave a telltale pile of shells and seed coverings. Average adult measurement is 10 inches.

Named for Englishman

The town of Amherst, Mass., was named by Governor Pownall, when it was incorporated in 1759, in honor of Lord Amherst, who in that year had taken Ticonderoga from the French, and later served as commander in chief of the armies in America and as governor of Virginia. He did not found Amherst college, which is named simply for the town.

Synthetic Rubber

During the World War when Germany was cut off from supplies of crude rubber a great effort was made to produce synthetic rubber. Toward the close of the war about 150 tons of synthetic rubber were being produced monthly in Germany from isoprene derivatives, but the product was inferior to natural rubber and really served well only in hard-rubber goods. The industry ceased at the close of the war.

CITIES OF SUMERIA HIGHLY CIVILIZED

In an address before the British Association of Science, Professor Landon, noted archeologist, declared that science is reasonably certain that civilization originated in either Sumeria or Egypt, says the Pathfinder Magazine. His opinion is based upon the results of extensive excavations made under the auspices of the Oxford museum and the Field museum of Chicago. That Sumerian civilization originated at a very early date is shown by the excavations at Kish and Jemdet Nasr, two of the most famous of the ancient Sumerian cities. The finds included the earliest known monochrome and polychrome painted ware. Pictographic tablets, seals and copper objects of many kinds were found. The earliest of these date back to the greatest antiquity—just how far nobody has been able to ascertain; the latest date 3,000 years before the beginning of the Christian era. It is an interesting fact that both in Sumeria and Egypt the best art was always produced at the beginning of an era.

COWS SAVED OWNER FROM MOTHER BEAR

Climbing up a 60-foot spruce tree with a black mother bear close behind him, slashing at his feet as he ascended, Dave Irons, a rancher of Sickle, in the Caribou district of British Columbia, was saved from serious injury and possible death by his own cows, who came running and bellowing to his rescue just as Irons had reached the uppermost limb, says the Vancouver Province.

The bear had by this time lightened the farmer of his gum boots and had made several nasty gashes in his leg. The cows hearing their master's voice—he came regularly to put salt on their "trails"—gathered around the foot of the tree, distracting the bear's attention, and she descended hurriedly to protect two tiny cubs which had taken refuge in the second tree, close to the one Irons had climbed.

The rancher had met many bears before, but they had always turned off the trail at his approach. He has now increased the cows' salt allowance.

Learning His Location

"Yesterday a strange motorist came tearing into our progressive little city," said the landlord of the Petunia tavern. "He ran over a child, and then hit the town well and smashed the pump to atoms. He said he didn't know at first that he was in a town."

"How did he learn the fact?" asked a guest.

"He found it out when Constable Slackputter arrested him for smashing the pump."—Kansas City Star.

"Scalp" Books

With the growth of gopher catching into business proportions in Marshall county, Kansas, trappers are using a really up-to-date system, says the Topeka Capital. The plan is to obtain sample books from tailor shops, remove the patches of cloth, and paste the scalps in rows in place of the cloth. A sample book holds 25 scalps to a page, and by looking over a sample card the county clerk can easily count the number.

Navajo Indians Afflicted

It is officially stated that the Navajo Indians are suffering from widespread trachoma, a disease which leads to blindness, and that probably one-third of the remaining members of this tribe are afflicted. A material affliction of this same tribe is the absence of good wells on their lands. Great areas are practically useless because of the lack of water.

Long Island Soil Rich

Long Island is a model place for market gardens, the soil being from two to six feet in depth, with enough phosphate to last under ordinary circumstances for about 40,000 years, and potash to last double that length of time, if estimates of soil conditions are correct as made by some experts.

The Fencebuster Returns

By AD SCHUSTE

(Copyright.)

MARIE, wife of "Fencebuster" Payne, held his letter in her lap and looked out of the window.

"It means more to him than he admits," she said. "A man at Bill's age does not like to think he is through. And he isn't, either"—she lifted her chin. "There is no reason, unless it is too much fame, for him to slide back."

Bill would be home in a few days, home from the big league for the winter and rest before the opening of the training season in the spring. It had been a poor year, he hinted in his letter, and his batting average had fallen behind. For a time there was doubt as to whether he would be asked to report for the training, but now, at least, that was settled.

"The old man says to show up," Bill wrote, "so I guess it depends on how I look against the youngsters whether or not I'll be traded to the bush."

The wife went out to the back yard to find young Bill, eleven-year-old worshiper of a ball player father, skinning the cat on a horizontal bar. Together they held a conference which resulted in a whoop of joy. Mother had offered to build the shed over into a gymnasium if Bill would organize an athletic club among the boys and agree to certain conditions. The carpenters had to rush to finish the building before the homecoming of the somewhat downcast "Fencebuster."

His first day home the hero spent with his feet on the table and his mind free from care. Next day he discovered the gymnasium.

"It's for Bill," the wife said. "He wanted to organize a club of boys; says he is going to be a great athlete like his father and I told him maybe you would see that an instructor was hired."

"Instructor? Who?"

"Well," the wife mentioned the one other big-league man the town possessed, "there was some talk of Fred Platman."

"Thought I was too old and fat, eh? Who said that Fred Platman was any more spruce than I? Do you mean to tell me you never once thought of me?" The demand was rough, but there was a pitiful appeal in the voice.

"Bill thought of you. He said he would not join the club unless you were instructor, but I thought maybe you would be too tired, or . . ."

"That's enough. I'm going to put these kids through their paces and I'll show them stunts Fred Platman never dreamed of."

The class started, and more than once big Bill, the "fencebuster," regretted his impulse. It was hard work doing these things which used to come so easily, and the boys were too quick in learning. Marie found him practicing by himself and several times had to remind their son of the promise made when the gymnasium was ordered. With his mind set to it and an applauding and admiring group of boys for stimulation, the Fencebuster held the job. There was talk of an exhibition by the class and then the announcement. Big Bill sent Fred Platman a complimentary ticket and laid a bet his rival would not attend. The weeks passed and at last came word that the ball player must report in the South for the training season.

"I'll make good," he said when he bade Marie farewell, "you see if I don't. Remember you thought I could not show those kids their stunts in the gym? Well, you were wrong, weren't you? Now watch my smoke!" And as he walked to the train slim of waist and light of step, a younger man than he had been in years, Marie knew he was right.

"I'll wait," she said, "until he has made good and then I'll tell him why I built the gymnasium and why I made the boys promise not to learn too quickly. He thinks he has trained them, and he has, perhaps, but they have done a whole lot more for him."

Tender Incident in "Old Hickory's Life"

Andrew Jackson, seventh President of the United States, had his moments of tenderness, in spite of his reputation for ferocity and hardness, points out Clifford Raymond in an article in Liberty. "In many cases in which hero worship involves a man of war," the writer explains, "there grows up, as a geranium bed alongside the slaughter house of his military operations, a legend of his private gentleness, which legend may contain fact." Thomas Benton, a friend of Jackson's, relates in his "Thirty Years' View" that one evening in February he called at the Hermitage, Jackson's home in Nashville, Tenn., and found Jackson at the fireside with his little adopted son and a lamb between his knees. The little boy had cried for the lamb because it was out in the cold, and Jackson had them both at the hearth.

LONG-HAIRED BEAUTY QUEEN CROWNED IN NEW YORK

Dorothy Britton, 19 year old dress-shop employe, has just won the title of "Miss New York" in America's latest and greatest beauty contest. She was selected by a committee of celebrated artists and experts from over 900 contestants from the great city, in a mammoth competition sponsored by the New York Mirror and Smart Set Magazine. Miss New York is now in Galveston competing in the International Beauty Pageant with beauties from all parts of the United States and several European countries. In spite of the fact that New York City is said to hold more beautiful women than any other city in the world, it has never yet won a national beauty contest. Miss Britton, the city's latest selection, is among the few beauties with long hair to enter important contests. She has never smoked, nor tasted liquor in her life; but drinks nine cups of black coffee a day without, she insists, any ill effects.

Origin of "Candidate"

The word "candidate" is derived from the Latin "candidus," meaning white. In Rome it was the custom for persons seeking office to appear in the Forum and other public places in white togas. Hence they came to be called "candidati," whence we get our "candidate."—Pathfinder Magazine.

Thawed by Electricity

Frozen water mains frequently are thawed out by electricity. In the dead of winter when all the houses in a section of the city find they cannot draw water at any of the faucets, the water department hears about it and appeals to the electric light and power company, which sends out an emergency crew. Electric power connections are made on hydrants at the two ends of the frozen section. The heat generated by the passage of the electricity through the pipes soon has water flowing freely again.

Gold Found in Iceland

What might be called a small "Klondike rush" has occurred in Iceland near Reikjavik, where an important deposit of gold has been discovered. Iceland was discovered more than a thousand years ago, but until recently it was not known that the island contained any gold deposits large enough to warrant development. There are 80,000 Icelanders and heretofore they have imported all their metals.

A Primitive Man

By MARTHA M. WILLIAMS

(Copyright.)

'ADAM delved, and Eve span—who was then the gentleman?' Jane flung at space generally. "I wish I had lived then—I like things simple."
"Yes, simplicity is your long suit—simplicity plus all the frills," Floy retorted.
"Don't be nasty, Floradora—spoils your picture. Almost makes you ugly," Jane countered with a roguish smile. "You are mad with me because I had rather dance to black Uncle Ned's fiddling than to the newest jazz."
"Tastes differ. 'Chicken in de bread tray,' I confess, does not inspire me. Indeed, I wonder anybody ever comes to a dance here."
"But you know you are quite mad about 'Ole Dan Tucker,'" Jane ran on, eyes twinkling, hard as she tried to look severe. To balt her step-sister mildly was her pet diversion. Floy was susceptible, and equally fickle, hence her emotional tempo varied, often from hour to hour. Just now she was particularly edged of mood. It was five o'clock. All afternoon she had been waiting for her newest affinity—now it was almost certain he would not come. It was aggravating—doubly so—with Pig Yardy phoning audaciously: "Unpack all the beauties, Jincy. See you in three shakes of a dead sheep's tail—along of a pal that's the goods—and then some."
"Where's his home and what's his name?" Jane demanded, to be answered by the click of hanging up.
"I am going out," Floy said bridling.
"Better not. Remember, two is company, three trumpery," artful Jane counseled. "I am sure to quarrel with Pig if the pal outshines him the least bit—and you know he is our dependence for tomorrow night—the Excells will bar us out sure as we show up without a man to our name."
"Oh—damn everybody," said Floy, darting toward the door, which opened to show Pig Yardy, grinning like a joss, make-believe to drag forward some one tall, tanned, merry-eyed, wholly strange, evidently the pal. The pair stopped dead. After half a breath, Pig broke out: "How providential! What do you mean, Florry-dory, hiding your light all this time? If I had been asked I would have laid long odds you didn't know a real swear word—no more than Jim Bacon here—his best cussing is 'Oh, peppermint, thunder and catnip.' Easy to see he needs you in his business—up in bluegrass he raises horses to run on the tracks, and mules to make the money he loses backing the racers. Once he has you to help with real able-bodied profanity, luck is bound to change."
"She shan't have him—if she did see him first—plain Jane has some few rights and means to stand up for them," that person broke out, frowning angrily at Pig. He sat her down, forcibly, saying: "You behave; show your raising. My Aunt Susan married your dad to see you had it."
"Be good, all of you if you intend to stay for supper—" Jane warned.
The meal was truly ambrosial, but Jimmy Bacon did not sense it—he sensed nothing, indeed, but Jane, plain Jane, with her red lips, her laughing eyes, her snowflake-falling feet, her voice of springtime, her laugh like silver bells. Profanation even to think of Pigs as her mate. Let him take Floy, the spitfire—she might stir him into being a real man. But for himself it was Jane.
Pig was not blind—two glances, casual listening, told him all he needed to know. But the knowledge affected neither his mood nor his appetite—he remained a noble trencherman to the bitter end. And when Thomas, hope of the good Excells, tall, gangling, shy, painfully young, came in later to stammer through flooding blushes that his mother had agreed at last they might dance Thursday night, if Major Loveman could persuade Uncle Ned to come and fiddle, Pig rose, cut the pigeon wing, and shouted: "I'll bring him, Tommy, dead or alive."
"I'm coming after the girls—the young ladies—I mean Miss Jane and Florry," Tommy stammered, shaking visibly. Then up rose Pig to say in his deepest voice: "Got it all wrong, Tommy. You stick to the frying-size generation, at least until you've cut your eye-teeth and a mustache."
"He shan't spoil things for you—I'll give you the first dance and the last and a lot more," Jane cried, stepping to Tommy's side. Pig nodded approval, but Jimmy Bacon frowned in spite of trying to laugh as he said: "Please tell me, somebody, what do I get?"
"I do not," said Jimmy sternly.
"You're too curious," Pig scoffed. "If we let you alone you'll want to go back to Adam, and find out which won."
"I can answer that right off the reel," Jane said, nestling toward Jimmy's elbow. "Why, neither won. It is, you see, always so much easier to kiss and make up than to give in. Eves have never forgotten that—but Adams remember as it pleases them—or not at all."
"I won't ever forget," Jimmy said.

The Mighty Wheel

The wheel is considered by many as the greatest invention. Without it modern transportation and motive power would be impossible.

AMUSEMENTS

Lillian Gish has played her Romola and her White Sister, her Mimi and her Civil war heroine—but a new Lillian Gish astounded the audience at the Met theater last night when she played "Hester Prynne." She seemed literally inspired.
"The Scarlet Letter," Nathaniel Hawthorne's famous classic, proved an ideal vehicle for the famous star, its dramatic plot of a woman, carrying a brand of shame thru life for the sake of the man she loves, making a theme so powerful that it enabled her to rise to the heights of true genius.
But there was something else behind it all. For six years Miss Gish has longed to play this vivid role, as a monument in film to her ancestors. She comes of original Puritan stock, and is one of the leading members of the Daughters of the Revolution, and playing the role was to her almost a religious rite.
Gripping Performance
As the little seamstress whose great love caused her to rise to almost angelic heights, Miss Gish plays a mighty drama of love and human souls. Consummate artistry marks every phase of her struggle against intolerance and the mighty climax holds one spellbound. Those who loved her in "La Boheme" or "The White Sister" will adore her in her new role.
Lars Hanson, the famous Swedish actor makes an ideal "Arthur Dimmesdale," a role that required remarkable acting skill, and Henry B. Walthall celebrated his first picture with Miss Gish since "The Birth of a Nation" with a masterly portrayal of her Nemesis.
Karl Dane had a role even more distinctive than that in "The Big Parade" and others well cast were Marcelle Corday, Mary Hawes, little Joyce Coad, William H. Tooker, Jules Cowles and James A. Marcus. Victor Seastrom directed the production, which was lavishly staged, with striking originality, the opening scenes in the huge reproduction of a Puritan village being handled in a daring manner. The photography throught has the quality of oil painting.
The production is her first Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer vehicle since "La Boheme," and will form an interesting part of screen history.

The Four Things That Matter.

There are four qualities we look for in a motor oil:

1. It must give perfect lubrication.
2. It must leave the engine in clean condition.
3. It must be free from impurities that damage the engine.

On these four counts we have chosen Sinclair Opaline Motor Oils and recommend them to our customers.

Easy Come, Easy Go

There are some strange tales of Broadway, but this true story is one of the strangest that we have heard: A French-Canuck who chopped down trees in the Canadian woods for 15 years at a salary of $100 per annum, came to New York for a holiday after 15 years of pine cutting in the woods. Within one hour he lost his $1,500 in a gambling house, and remarked, "Well, such is life. It's another 15 years in the woods for me—but easy come, easy go."—The Outlook.

TRAIN RIDER INJURED--N. & W. ENGINEER SICK

Frank Lacey, of 12 Innis Avenue, Columbus, an employe of Sturm & Dillard, C. & H. contractors, boarded an N. & W. freight at Dorney Station Saturday afternoon and in alighting therefrom at Ritt's Siding in the rear of St. Joseph's cemetery to go to the camp on the Lindsey farm, landed upon his head instead of his feet, cutting an ugly gash over his right eye. Lacey was brought to the office of Dr. Lloyd Jonnes in South Court street, the local surgeon of the N. & W. for first aid and was sent home later in the evening. For a time it was feared that Lacey's eye had been injured.

Sunday night at 11 o'clock Dr. Jonnes was called to the N. & W. tower and gave first aid to a freight engineer suffering from the effects of kidney-stones. The train was taken into Columbus by the fireman.

BACHELORS ARE WORST DRIVERS

Why is it that they are constantly picking on the poor bachelor? Some one is always trying to place them in the wrong. The latest dig comes in a report made by the Accident Prevention Bureau of the insurance companies. This states that married men are better automobile drivers than single men. Or, to put it in a less pleasing manner, that single men are worse drivers than married men.

The statement is based on a study of several thousand automobile accidents in 1926. It shows that single men were involved in more than half of all the highway accidents. The theory is that the benedicts have more respect for authority, more mature judgment and a greater sense of responsibility than the apostles of single blessedness. To comment on this would be like trying to paint the lilly. It is difficult to see what can be done about this unless we have laws forbidding single men to drive cars.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

The Scanty Exceptions

"The Oriental Grotto prob'ly won't be open tonight," said the landlord of the Torpidity tavern, in reply to the inquiry of a guest concerning the local temple of flicker. "You see, this is prayer meeting night and it's always closed on such nights, and when the Rebecca lodge meets or the ladies' aid gives an oyster supper or the Lyceum is going on and the nights once in a while when the young folks are tripping the light fantastic toe and on the rare occasions when the Sock and Bustin' Coteria presents a drama."

"Well, for goodness sake, when is it open?"

"On every other night except them I've mentioned, besides, of course, Sunday and when it storms."—Kansas City Star.

MRS. ARMSTRONG'S INJURIES SERIOUS

Dr. Geo. W. Heffner called on Mrs. Harley W. Armstrong at Grant Hospital, Columbus, yesterday. He reports her condition as serious, suffering from a concussion of the brain, broken arm and three broken ribs and severe burns on the back from gasoline. Mrs. Armstrong was injured in an auto collision on the Adelphi pike one-half mile east of this city Friday evening when the car in which she was returning to her home in Laurelville in company with her husband, daughter and Miss Margaret Williamson, was struck by the car driven by Forrest Hunt of this city. Her daughter, Miss Violet, is also a patient at the hospital, suffering from a broken malar bone which it is feared, will prove a permanent facial injury.

Miss Amber and the Mask Ball

By JOHN OLCOTT

(Copyright.)

"AND, now, Miss Amber, honey," said Aunt Chloe's mellow voice, "Now that Mrs. Judge Hollis has telephoned that you're to come to her quite informal mask ball this evening, what you goin' to weah, Miss Amber?"
Amber Mayland looked up from the portrait she was painting in the great dining room at Maylands, which she had turned into a studio. "Why, Aunt Chloe," she said with a tiny wistful note in her sweet voice, "I am afraid I can't go—I haven't a thing to wear."
Chloe stood there, glumly, forgetting her own disappointment in the disaster that was befalling a "Mayland" of the bluest blood in the whole South. Presently, she turned away and passing through empty rooms and echoing halls, for she and Amber Mayland lived in the east wing of the decaying house, Aunt Chloe finally reached the vast garret that covered the great house, and which was packed full of antiques that would have brought a fortune if they were put on the market.
Of course when Amber was in Paris she had met one of the Mayland kin—who had ordered a copy of the portrait of Lady Amber Mayland, who had been Amber's beautiful ancestress, and a great belle. It was this portrait that Amber was copying now, and she did not stop until once more she heard the ponderous footsteps of the big woman, who now stood before her with a carefully dusted small hair trunk in her grasp. She dropped it on the polished floor and folded her arms.
Amber leaned over and read the inscription, that was put on the top of the trunk with small brass nails: "Lady Amber Mayland—Her trunk—1776."
"Now," uttered Chloe triumphantly, "who says you can't go to the mask ball, Miss Amber?"
"Of course I shall go, Chloe! I must make a mask of black silk—and we will have to walk, Chloe."
When Amber was dressed, the old servant hovered about her ecstatically, for never had Amber Mayland looked more beautiful, and even her own mirror told her that she was the living image of her ancestress, Lady Amber Mayland of London.
And after Chloe had carefully locked up the big house, they walked down the driveway, Amber wearing a Chinese crepe shawl wrapped around her, with one point falling over her powdered hair, and her little white slippers thrust into high black satin party boots. Aunt Chloe looked immaculate in starched white linen, with a white handkerchief bound around her head, and strutted on ahead of Amber with an air of great importance. Presently, carriages and motor cars passed them, many of them stopping to invite Amber and Chloe to ride, but the girl laughingly refused all invitations. As soon as they reached the grounds of the Hollis place, Amber adjusted her tiny black silk mask, saw that the little black patches were still affixed to chin and curve of temple. It seemed so like old times to be carefree and go to dances, as she used to do in the old days, when her parents were living, and before Phil DeMar had engaged himself to Mollie Jenkins, the rich speculator's daughter! It would seem odd to go to a dance without Phil's merry companionship.
From the very beginning, Amber knew that so far as she was concerned, the ball was to be a huge success. There was one tall slim man whose steeled strength, and whose gray eyes through his scarlet mask thrilled Amber to the core. His costume was that of Mephisto, and soon she was aware that he was never far away from her. He did not dance very much, but his name was down on her card three times—for the first dance and the last two.
Many of her other partners she recognized as old friends.
It was the last dance, and Mephisto finally led Amber into the moonlighted veranda where he found seats in a shaded corner.
"I don't want to unmask," said Amber, "I love this romantic ignorance of my neighbors."
"That is true," he admitted. Then, suddenly, "Will you unmask out here, Amber, I must have a word with you!"
"Your eyes and voice remind me of an old friend—but I would rather not know," she quavered, and then Mephisto lifted his hands and removed his red mask and tossed back his head, hooded in red. He smiled at her.
"Phil!" she gasped.
He nodded. "Have you heard, Amber, how Miss Jenkins ran away with a handsome chauffeur?"
"I am glad," she whispered, and then he said:
"Be glad for us both, darling Amber! Forgive me running after the fleshpots—I have never been happy for one hour since we parted—could you learn to care for me, Amber? I have learned to work, and earn money for us both, dear—you need not be afraid—can you love me?"
"Ah, Phil, I have never ceased to care!" Still later, Phil drove Amber home in his big car, but Chloe, sitting alone in the tonneau, went promptly to sleep, for she believed the whole thing was a dream, until they arrived at Maylands and realized the glorious reality.

"THE VILLAGE BLACKSMITH"

Was Written a Year Before It Was Published.

Longfellow wrote the poem of "The Village Blacksmith," more than a year before it appeared in print and when it was about to appear he wrote to his father: "My pen has not been very prolific of late; only a little poetry has trickled from it. There will be a kind of a ballad on a blacksmith in the next 'Knickerbocker,' (November, 1840), which you may consider as a song in praise of your ancestor at Newbury" (the first Stephen Longfellow).
The suggestion of the poem came from the smithy which the poet passed daily, and which stood beneath a horse-chestnut tree not far from his home in

Cambridge.
The tree, against the protests of Longfellow and others, was removed in 1876 on the ground that it imperilled the drivers of heavy loads who passed under it.
On February 27, 1879, the poet's seventy-second birthday, the children of Cambridge presented him with an armchair made from the wood of this chestnut tree. Longfellow wrote a poem the same day commemorating the event.

KILLING THE FARMER'S FRIEND

When an Iowa farmer complained that the pheasants were eating his corn, the game department killed two of the birds, examined their crops and found 200 cut worms—and no corn. Almost without exception, when the scientists investigate such cases they find the same result. The farmer owes his crop to the feathered police that keep down the bugs, insects and worms. With continuing slaughter of every form of bird life, the insect loss will be heavier and farm work harder. The nation could train an army of riflemen in a short time, but it couldn't in a century restore the bird armies that are the farmers' allies in raising food to feed the country.

MAYTAG DEALER MOVEMENT INAUGURATES NEW BUSINESS ERA

Association Upsets All Precedents and Is of Such Scope That It Is Destined To Be Felt In All Corners of the Country—Founded Primarily For Service and Propagation of the Maytag Washday Helpfulness To All the World.

Gustafson, Columbus, Ohio, National Chairman, Operating, Program and Quotas Committee, also President of Division F. W. F. Rechner, Findlay, Ohio, National Chairman, Visiting Committee. M. L. Mann, Lawrenceville, Illinois, National Chairman, Sales Supervision Committee, also Vice President of Division E. T. F. Dixon, Indianapolis, Indiana, National Vice President also President of Division C. C. A. Poole, St. Louis, Missouri, National Chairman, Territory and Finance Committee, also President Division E.

A radically new merchandising movement was organized May 6 at Indianapolis. The movement is of such scope that it is destined to be felt in all corners of the business world. It is so comprehensive and founded on such substantial principles that its effects will be apparent immediately. As the movement grows it is bound to influence the trend of modern business methods to the extent that revolutionary changes in marketing methods may occur in many industries.

The Indianapolis Branch, Maytag Dealers' association is the new movement. The association was formed at special convention of Maytag dealers, held in Indianapolis, May 6, and marks the inauguration of a new era in merchandising history. Never before have dealers for a nationally known product attempted to associate themselves or been permitted to associate themselves for the advancement of their own interests and their customers' interests. Heretofore all organizing and systematizing has been on the part of the manufacturer or the distributor and the dealer and consumer have had only such share in the activities as were allotted to them.

The new association upsets all such precedents. It will function as an independent dealer association having for its principal objects the unification of dealer interests and the simplification of distribution, operation and costs; the ultimate benefits being passed on to the consumer. The Maytag Dealers' association is founded primarily for service and the propagation of the Maytag message of washday helpfulness to all the world. It is further expected that the closer cooperation which will result between the dealers and the Maytag company will promote a state of dealer and consumer satisfaction which cannot but reflect itself in enormous sales increases of Maytag Washers.

The Indianapolis Branch Maytag Dealers' association is the achievement of George Rhodes, manager of the Indianapolis Branch of the Maytag company. Despite the sensational success of the Indianapolis Branch of the Maytag company, which in sales increases parallels and even exceeds the phenomenal sales record of the Maytag company itself—a sales increase of 5,200 per cent in six years—Mr. Rhodes realized that systematization and coordination of dealers by the manufacturer and branches have a natural limit of effectiveness. To achieve maximum heights of dealer interest and efficiency further dealer efforts should come from the dealers themselves. From idea to action is but a quick step for Mr. Rhodes, and accordingly the Indianapolis Branch Maytag Dealers' association was organized at an enthusiastic meeting of Maytag dealers at Indianapolis, May 6.

F. L. Maytag, president of the board of directors of the Maytag company, whose career is one of the remarkable merchandising successes of the age, was present to meet the new dealer organization. He expressed himself as greatly and pleasantly surprised at the overwhelming enthusiasm with which the dealers perfected the new organization and spirit of the token of cooperation pledged him.

The new Maytag Dealer association is at present operative only in Indianapolis Maytag territory comprising the states of Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky and Eastern Missouri, but it is anticipated that the new merchandising movement will spread to include not only the entire Maytag national dealer organization, but dealer organizations in other industries as well.

National officers elected at the Indianapolis meeting who will have charge of the welfare and progress of the new dealer association, both nationally and locally, are men prominent in merchandising circles and community affairs. They are as follows:

F. E. Davenny, Ashtabula, Ohio, National President Indianapolis Branch Maytag Dealers' association, also president of division B—a territorial unit of the Indianapolis Branch comprising Eastern Ohio.

T. F. Dixon, Indianapolis, Indiana, National Vice President Indianapolis Branch Maytag Dealers' association, also president of division C—comprising Northeastern Indiana, Northwestern Ohio and Southern Michigan.

Charles Kratsch, Chicago, Illinois, National Secretary and Treasurer, Indianapolis Maytag Dealers' association, also president of division D—comprising Northwestern Indiana and Northern Illinois.

H. R. Gustafson, Columbus, Ohio, National Chairman Operating, Program and Quotas committee, also president of division F—comprising Southeastern Indiana, Southwestern Ohio, Eastern and Central Kentucky.

A NEW WAY TO PLOW CORN.

On Wednesday, May 25, there will be a demonstration of the latest method of plowing corn, at the farm operated by George Seymour on the Darbyville pike a short distance from Circleville. This is the H. M. Crites farm formerly rented by Charles Weidinger.

It will well repay anyone to visit this demonstration and see the Moline-Fordson cultivator which is the simplest and most efficient corn plow outfit manufactured today. You will be given an opportunity to drive the outfit yourself.

No man likes to be sued. The notoriety is unpleasant, to say nothing of the worry and concern. And the cost—even if the jury doesn't bring in a $20,000 verdict against you—may run into hundreds of dollars.

How much better to have someone assume all responsibility, defend any suit and even pay any verdict a jury may return against you!

DRAIN LAKE TO GET TREASURESalvaging Ancient Ships of Caligula Is a Task
for Hercules

Washington.—Bringing out of the mysterious depths of Lake Nemi the two sunken ships of the Roman Emperor Caligula is a task for a modern Hercules, and Italian engineers have been carefully studying countless plans proposed by individuals from all over Europe.

Suggestions fall into two general classes, says Prof. William S. Messer of the classical department of Dartmouth college, who describes the situation in Art and Archeology. The first method would be to raise the sunken ships. This was attempted in 1439, when workmen with grappling hooks fished for one of the royal barges and succeeded only in tearing off part of the prow and sides. It was also tried in 1535 and in 1827, with further damage to the heavy, unmovable hulk.

Plan to Drain Lake.

The second type of plan seems more feasible, Professor Messer states, if the cost proves to be within reason.
This method would involve draining the lake and removing the ships from the low meadow land of the lake bottom. The Alban lake, near by, has an outlet built by the Romans about 387 B. C.

"As this lake is 85 feet lower it may be possible, by transferring the waters of Nemi to it, to use this ancient wonder of Roman engineering for restoring to the modern world Roman Imperial barges," says Professor Messer.

"A tradition of a vessel of fabulous magnificence sunk in Lake Nemi persisted from imperial times and was never wholly forgotten," he states.
"Peasants fished over the spot for centuries and no one knows what prizes have been secretly recovered and sold."

Even as late as 1895 attempts were made to obtain bronze decorations, bits of marble flooring and other ornaments of the luxurious ship, but public sentiment began to protest against the destructiveness of the divers and now the commission appointed by the Italian government is determined that no program will be followed which will further endanger the historic Roman treasures.

The finding of an inscribed lead pipe in 1895 proved that the larger and better known ship belonged to the Emperor Caligula, rather than to Tiberius, to whom tradition attributed it.

Is Real Ship, Belief.

An Italian naval engineer who talked with the divers in 1895 concluded that this royal bark was a real ship with rudder and oars.

"Others are disinclined to believe this," Professor Messer says, "and hold, with the earlier investigator De Marchi, that it was, rather, a great float with elaborate superstructures, a palace, gardens, chapels, adorned with marbles, bronzes, precious stones and all the luxuries which the mad emperor knew so well how to employ."

"The answer to the questions awaits the report of the commission and the funds necessary to carry out the accepted plan."

Starving Family Shares
Last Crust With Dog

New York.—All night long the whim-pering of a dog had kept tenants of the front and rear buildings in a little street in New York city's tenement district on edge. It was the second night that the animal's cries had rent
the silence, and the police were notified.

Two patrolmen traced the whimpering to the apartment of Mrs. Gussie Tesser, on the first floor. They knocked at the door. The only response was the intensified howling of the dog. They turned the knob and walked in.

A slight woman, pale, with feverish eyes, lay in one of the two beds. On the other side of the room, in another bed, lay two children, their faces wan and gaunt. They were Mrs. Tesser's children, Catherine, five, and Harry, nine.

The woman told police her husband had deserted them ten days before.
For a week the three had had nothing to eat. The last morsel was a crust, which the children shared with their pet, the dog. The woman was taken to a hospital, and the children were placed in the care of a children's society.

Man's Bones Found
in Mastodon Layer

Sagerton, Texas.—Bones which when put together form several complete skeletons of huge mas-todons have been dug out of a grave pit near here during the last few weeks. In a deep layer of the bed and close to where mastodon bones were found, the skeleton of a man was unearthed a few days ago. The surroundings and other circumstances connected with the skeleton lead to the belief that it is that of a prehistoric man, dating back,
perhaps, to the age of the mas-todons.

SHORT STORIES OF
THE BUCKEYE STATE

Lancastrian Schools in Ohio.

The expense entailed has always proved an obstacle to the establishment of educational facilities and their improvement, and the advocates of public schools in Ohio found such sentiment pretty strongly entrenched behind what was called the Lan-castrian system of schools, which had been established in a number of places in the state, the chief recommendation of which was its cheapness of operation.

It was the monitorial plan which under various forms has appeared here and there all through the history of modern education. Joseph Lancaster, who was born in London, England, in 1778, merely improved upon the system already known as the Dr. Bell plan. Lancaster was a seaman in early life, but turning into philanthropic work
he landed in the educational field with little preparation for the work.

By using the older and more capable pupils under him as teachers of the younger ones,
without pay, of course, he contrived to press home to these monitors what they had been taught, as they themselves made use of their knowledge in teaching others. Being singularly qualified for such management, it was found that he was conducting a school of many hundred pupils, helped only by these pupil monitors, quite successfully, and at far less cost than such work had ever been done for before.

This attracted attention and many of the nobility became his patrons. A Royal Lancastrian society was formed and by it many schools were established and buildings erected. The system spread upon the continent and promised to come into general vogue, but just then Lancaster fell out with the chief supporters of the organization and came to America. This was about 1830. Lancastrian schools were established in New England, and soon the plan was being worked out west of the Alleghenies. A number of towns in Ohio had such schools, among them Cincinnati, Marietta and Hillsboro.

Lancaster himself was killed in an accident in New York City in 1838, and his family moving to Mexico City, the plan was tried out there and in some South American countries.—J. H. Galbraith in Columbus Dispatch.

Parisian Suit Is Winsome in Color
Smart and Varied Styles Are Offered by Designers This Season.

If this spring does not prove to be what the garment manufacturers call a "suit season," writes a Paris fashion authority in the New York Times, it will be because Paris has striven too industriously to make it so, designing so many—and all fascinating—types of suits that one is torn with the effort to choose between them and must needs turn to some other costume where the fashion rules of "you must or must not wear" are more clearly defined and therefore more easily followed.

To begin with there are the suits in tweeds, chevrons and similar woollens, cut after the Norfolk pattern with shoulder yoke and straps running down, through which the belt is threaded. The skirts of these are most often box or group plaited, though Jean Patou manages a variation of the standard model by providing a wrapped skirt of brown and beige check for a Norfolk jacket of plain brown. Poirot takes a Norfolk jacket suit of pinkish beige laine, adds patch pockets of calfskin with zipper fastenings at top, a calfskin belt, a lining of Chinese red crepe de chine, and a sweater under the jacket, striped in Chinese red and purple. As a rule, however, these more or less tailored suits have blouses with turnover collars and one of the new frilly jabots in organdie or chiffon or crepe de chine.

Then there is the suit in black and white check that Louise Boulanger sponsors, a rather long jacket, collarless so that it encircles the base of the neck flatly and buttons on the left side, where a series of deep semi-circles scallop the overlapping edge of the jacket from neck to hem. Black buttons are set into the points of these scallops, and black edges each of the plaits that cluster on the front of the skirt.

Jauntiest of all are the little double-breasted yachting suits, copied as nearly as possible after the brilliant yachting suits that the European male permitted himself last summer. Double-breasted jackets of royal blue flannel, brave with gilt buttons, and wide trousers of pinkish beige or gray, reads the description of these surprising suits; and the same description, substituting a narrow wrapped skirt for trousers, applies for the feminine yachting suit this season. Redfern even borrows the masculine hat as well, providing his model with a soft fedora in beige, banded with royal blue.

For fear this smart little double-breasted jacket be condemned for appearing too often in the same colors, Lelong has made it up quite as attractively in dull red flannel with beige skirt; while Jane Regny makes it entirely in white flannel with the abundant gold buttons on pockets and back belt and an officer's white-crowned cap to lend authority to it all. With these dashing suits are worn white silk blouses with high turnover collars and appropriately colored ties.

Just as these suits are spirited and buoyant, so is a little bolero suit from Jane Regny demure. In the first place, it is made in a dull, French blue charmelaine, and the short bolero, scalloped about all its edges, was held in place only by a band that buttoned about the throat; the bolero hung open to show a double-breasted vest of white pique bearing a double row of buttons in the regulation vest manner. The peplum, long foreign to our fashions, has come back with the waistline, and flares very becomingly on the new jacket suits of black taffeta seen in nearly every collection.

Black-and-White Mode Extends to Millinery

Crocheted straws are again in vogue and follow all the interesting lines of the new season to obtain smartness. Colors in both straws, grosgrains and felts are exceedingly beautiful and are varied. All the shades of blue for the spring, beige, green, black, rose tints and gray are smartly used for the newest hats. The popular combination of black and white has been used by Alice White, the motion picture player, for a becoming little turned-up brim type of hat that she wears in a scene from her film, "The Sea Tiger."

MUSSOLINI
Has Been Arrested Many Times As Dangerous Red.

Benito Mussolini, Dictator of Italy, is one of the few heads of governments, outside of Russia, who has a police record. For Mussolini, as is pointed out in an article in this week's Liberty, was an aggressive radical before the war and for his revolutionary activities served several jail sentences and paid many fines.

The official record of Mussolini's infractions of the Italian law, secretly copied by a well-known writer whose identity, for obvious reasons, is withheld, shows that the Italian Dictator's misdemeanors ranged from "making a public speech without due notice" to "threats with arms in hand."

On October 16, 1911, for instance, he was arrested on the occasion of a radical demonstration against the Italian expedition to Tripoli and accused of the following crimes: "1. Resistance to the public authorities and acts of violence against public officials. 2. Violent interference with the freedom of men called under arms. 3. The closing by violent means of industrial business and factories. 4. The stoppage by violent means of the tramways of the Romagna. 5. Damaging the telephone lines. 6. Damaging the state telegraph lines. 7. Forcing by violent means the stopping of a locomotive. 8. Placing a telegraph pole across a railway line, with danger to an express train."

His editorship of the radical paper, "Avanti," brought him into conflict with the authorities many times, during one of which Mussolini expressed the hope for "better days for the liberty of the press."

SULPHUR
Assists In Controlling Peach Scab and Brown Rot.

Spraying or dusting peaches with some form of sulphur, not lime-sulphur, when the husks are mostly off the young fruits will assist in controlling scab and brown rot. It is important that this be done as soon as the fruits are exposed by the shedding of their husks as they are then liable to attack by the fungi that cause these diseases.

For a liquid spray, some form of sulphur such as peach mix, dry mix, or dritomic sulphur is suggested by Curtis May, assistant plant pathologist at the Ohio Experiment Station. To control curculio also, add 1 1/4 pounds of arsenate of lead to each 50 gallons.

An 80-10-10 dust may be used successfully on peaches. This dust is made up of 80 pounds of superfine sulphur, 10 pounds of arsenate of hydrated lime, and 10 pounds of arsenate of lead. Dusting should be done when the air is quiet to insure that all parts of the tree are thoroughly coated with material.

Mr. May cautions against the use of liquid lime-sulphur or the ordinary dry lime-sulphur on peaches, as severe injury is likely to result.

Peach scab lives over winter in cankers on the twigs. Some of the spores that are produced in these cankers, fall on and infect the young twigs and fruits. Dry spots are produced on the fruit. These may coalesce and cover half the peach. Cracked fruits are also commonly due to scab.

Brown rot lives over winter on mummified fruits on the tree or ground as well as in cankers on the tree. Spores are produced and infect the fruit causing a soft rot. Brown rot is the common rot of ripe peaches.

Ounce of Prevention
It's a good investment to spend money for fire-fighting equipment. It would be a still better investment to spend money to prevent fires from starting. There never yet was a fire which did any damage before it started.

Townsend's chipmunk is the darkest of the many species of chipmunk in the western states and ranges along the Pacific coast. Average adult measurement is 10 inches.

Named for Englishman
The town of Amherst, Mass., was named by Governor Pownall, when it was incorporated in 1759, in honor of Lord Amherst, who in that year had taken Ticonderoga from the French, and later served as commander in chief of the armies in America and as governor of Virginia. He did not found Amherst college, which is named simply for the town.

The Four Things That Matter.
There are four qualities we look for in a motor oil:

1. It must give perfect lubrication.
2. It must leave the engine in clean condition.

3. It must be free from impurities that damage the engine.

On these four counts we have chosen Sinclair Opaline Motor Oils and recommend them to our customers.

Easy Come, Easy Go

There are some strange tales of Broadway, but this true story is one of the strangest that we have heard:

A French-Canuck who chopped down trees in the Canadian woods for 15 years at a salary of $100 per annum, came to New York for a holiday after 15 years of pine cutting in the woods. Within one hour he lost his $1,500 in a gambling house, and remarked, "Well, such is life. It's another 15 years in the woods for me—but easy come, easy go."—The Outlook.

TRAIN RIDER INJURED--N. & W. ENGINEER SICK

Frank Lacey, of 12 Innis Avenue, Columbus, an employee of Sturm & Dillard, C. & H. contractors, boarded an N. & W. freight at Dorney Station Saturday afternoon and in alighting therefrom at Ritt's Siding in the rear of St. Joseph's cemetery to go to the camp on the Lindsey farm, landed upon his head instead of his feet, cutting an ugly gash over his right eye. Lacey was brought to the office of Dr. Lloyd Jonnes in South Court street, the local surgeon of the N. & W. for first aid and was sent home later in the evening. For a time it was feared that Lacey's eye had been injured.

Sunday night at 11 o'clock Dr. Jonnes was called to the N. & W. tower and gave first aid to a freight engineer suffering from the effects of kidney-stones. The train was taken into Columbus by the fireman.

BACHELORS ARE WORST DRIVERS

Why is it that they are constantly picking on the poor bachelor? Some one is always trying to place them in the wrong. The latest dig comes in a report made by the Accident Prevention Bureau of the insurance companies. This states that married men are better automobile drivers than single men. Or, to put it in a less pleasing manner, that single men are worse drivers than married men.

The statement is based on a study of several thousand automobile accidents in 1926. It shows that single men were involved in more than half of all the highway accidents. The theory is that the benedicts have more respect for authority, more mature judgment and a greater sense of responsibility than the apostles of single blessedness. To comment on this would be like trying to paint the lily. It is difficult to see what can be done about this unless we have laws forbidding single men to drive cars.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

The Scanty Exceptions

"The Oriental Grotto prob'ly won't be open tonight," said the landlord of the Torpidity tavern, in reply to the inquiry of a guest concerning the local temple of flicker. "You see, this is prayer meeting night and it's always closed on such nights, and when the Rebecca lodge meets or the ladies' aid gives an oyster supper or the Lyceum is going on and the nights once in a while when the young folks are tripping the light fantastic toe and on the rare occasions when the Sock and Bustin' Coteria presents a drama."

"Well, for goodness sake, when is it open?"

"On every other night except them I've mentioned, besides, of course, Sunday and when it storms."—Kansas City Star.

MRS. ARMSTRONG'S INJURIES SERIOUS

Dr. Geo. W. Heffner called on Mrs. Harley W. Armstrong at Grant Hospital, Columbus, yesterday. He reports her condition as serious, suffering from a concussion of the brain, broken arm and three broken ribs and severe burns on the back from gasoline. Mrs. Armstrong was injured in an auto collision on the Adelphi pike one-half mile east of this city Friday evening when the car in which she was returning to her home in Laurelville in company with her husband, daughter and Miss Margaret Williamson, was struck by the car driven by Forrest Hunt of this city. Her daughter, Miss Violet, is also a patient at the hospital, suffering from a broken malar bone which it is feared, will prove a permanent facial injury.

Miss Amber and the Mask Ball

By JOHN OLCOTT

(Copyright.)

"AND, now, Miss Amber, honey," said Aunt Chloe's mellow voice, "Now that Mrs. Judge Hollis has telephoned that you're to come to her quite informal mask ball this evening, what you goin' to wear, Miss Amber?"

Amber Mayland looked up from the portrait she was painting in the great dining room at Maylands, which she had turned into a studio. "Why, Aunt Chloe," she said with a tiny wistful note in her sweet voice, "I am afraid I can't go—I haven't a thing to wear." Chloe stood there, glumly, forgetting her own disappointment in the disaster that was befalling a "Mayland" of the bluest blood in the whole South. Presently, she turned away and passing through empty rooms and echoing halls, for she and Amber Mayland lived in the east wing of the decaying house, Aunt Chloe finally reached the vast garret that covered the great house, and which was packed full of antiques that would have brought a fortune if they were put on the market.

Of course when Amber was in Paris she had met one of the Mayland kin—who had ordered a copy of the portrait of Lady Amber Mayland, who had been Amber's beautiful ancestress, and a great belle. It was this portrait that Amber was copying now, and she did not stop until once more she heard the ponderous footsteps of the big woman, who now stood before her with a carefully dusted small hair trunk in her grasp. She dropped it on the polished floor and folded her arms.

Amber leaned over and read the inscription, that was put on the top of the trunk with small brass nails: "Lady Amber Mayland—Her trunk—1776."

"Now," uttered Chloe triumphantly, "who says you can't go to the mask ball, Miss Amber?"

"Of course I shall go, Chloe! I must make a mask of black silk—and we will have to walk, Chloe."

When Amber was dressed, the old servant hovered about her ecstatically, for never had Amber Mayland looked more beautiful, and even her own mirror told her that she was the living image of her ancestress, Lady Amber Mayland of London.

And after Chloe had carefully locked up the big house, they walked down the driveway, Amber wearing a Chinese crepe shawl wrapped around her, with one point falling over her powdered hair, and her little white slippers thrust into high black satin party boots. Aunt Chloe looked immaculate in starched white linen, with a white handkerchief bound around her head, and strutted on ahead of Amber with an air of great importance. Presently, carriages and motor cars passed them, many of them stopping to invite Amber and Chloe to ride, but the girl laughingly refused all invitations. As soon as they reached the grounds of the Hollis place, Amber adjusted her tiny black silk mask, saw that the little black patches were still affixed to chin and curve of temple. It seemed so like old times to be carefree and go to dances, as she used to do in the old days, when her parents were living, and before Phil DeMar had engaged himself to Mollie Jenkins, the rich speculator's daughter! It would seem odd to go to a dance without Phil's merry companionship.

From the very beginning, Amber knew that so far as she was concerned, the ball was to be a huge success. There was one tall slim man whose steeled strength, and whose gray eyes through his scarlet mask thrilled Amber to the core. His costume was that of Mephisto, and soon she was aware that he was never far away from her. He did not dance very much, but his name was down on her card three times—for the first dance and the last two.

Many of her other partners she recognized as old friends.

It was the last dance, and Mephisto finally led Amber into the moonlighted veranda where he found seats in a shaded corner.

"I don't want to unmask," said Amber, "I love this romantic ignorance of my neighbors."

"That is true," he admitted. Then, suddenly, "Will you unmask out here, Amber, I must have a word with you!"

"Your eyes and voice remind me of an old friend—but I would rather not know," she quavered, and then Mephisto lifted his hands and removed his red mask and tossed back his head, hooded in red. He smiled at her.

"Phil!" she gasped.

He nodded. "Have you heard, Amber, how Miss Jenkins ran away with a handsome chauffeur?"

"I am glad," she whispered, and then he said:

"Be glad for us both, darling Amber! Forgive me running after the fleshpots—I have never been happy for one hour since we parted—could you learn to care for me, Amber? I have learned to work, and earn money for us both, dear—you need not be afraid—can you love me?"

"Ah, Philip, I have never ceased to care!" Still later, Phil drove Amber home in his big car, but Chloe, sitting alone in the tonneau, went promptly to sleep, for she believed the whole thing was a dream, until they arrived at Maylands and realized the glorious reality.

"THE VILLAGE BLACKSMITH"

Was Written a Year Before It Was Published.

Longfellow wrote the poem of "The Village Blacksmith," more than a year before it appeared in print and when it was about to appear he wrote to his father: "My pen has not been very prolific of late; only a little poetry has trickled from it. There will be a kind of a ballad on a blacksmith in the next 'Knickerbocker,' (November, 1840), which you may consider as a song in praise of your ancestor at Newbury" (the first Stephen Longfellow).

The suggestion of the poem came from the smithy which the poet passed daily, and which stood beneath a horse-chestnut tree not far from his home in

Cambridge.

The tree, against the protests of Longfellow and others, was removed in 1876 on the ground that it imperiled the drivers of heavy loads who passed under it.

On February 27, 1879, the poet's seventy-second birthday, the children of Cambridge presented him with an armchair made from the wood of this chestnut tree. Longfellow wrote a poem the same day commemorating the event.

KILLING THE FARMER'S FRIEND

When an Iowa farmer complained that the pheasants were eating his corn, the game department killed two of the birds, examined their crops and found 200 cut worms—and no corn. Almost without exception, when the scientists investigate such cases they find the same result. The farmer owes his crop to the feathered police that keep down the bugs, insects and worms. With continuing slaughter of every form of bird life, the insect loss will be heavier and farm work harder. The nation could train an army of riflemen in a short time, but it couldn't in a century restore the bird armies that are the farmers' allies in raising food to feed the country.

MAYTAG DEALER MOVEMENT INAUGURATES NEW BUSINESS ERA

Dixon, Indianapolis, Indiana, National Vice President also President of Division C. C. A. Poole, St. Louis, Missouri, National Chairman, Territory and Finance Committee, also President Division E.

A radically new merchandising movement was organized May 6 at Indianapolis. The movement is of such scope that it is destined to be felt in all corners of the business world. It is so comprehensive and founded on such substantial principles that its effects will be apparent immediately. As the movement grows it is bound to influence the trend of modern business methods to the extent that revolutionary changes in marketing methods may occur in many industries.

The Indianapolis Branch, Maytag Dealers' association is the new movement. The association was formed at special convention of Maytag dealers, held in Indianapolis, May 6, and marks the inauguration of a new era in merchandising history. Never before have dealers for a nationally known product attempted to associate themselves or been permitted to associate themselves for the advancement of their own interests and their customers' interests. Heretofore all organizing and systematizing has been on the part of the manufacturer or the distributor and the dealer and consumer have had only such share in the activities as were allotted to them.

The new association upsets all such precedents. It will function as an independent dealer association having for its principal objects the unification of dealer interests and the simplification of distribution, operation and costs; the ultimate benefits being passed on to the consumer. The Maytag Dealers' association is founded primarily for service and the propagation of the Maytag message of washday helpfulness to all the world. It is further expected that the closer cooperation which will result between the dealers and the Maytag company will promote a state of dealer and consumer satisfaction which cannot but reflect itself in enormous sales increases of Maytag Washers.

The Indianapolis Branch Maytag Dealers' association is the achievement of George Rhodes, manager of the Indianapolis Branch of the Maytag company. Despite the sensational success of the Indianapolis Branch of the Maytag company, which in sales increases parallels and even exceeds the phenomenal sales record of the Maytag company itself—a sales increase of 5,200 per cent in six years—Mr. Rhodes realized that systematization and coordination of dealers by the manufacturer and branches have a natural limit of effectiveness. To achieve maximum heights of dealer interest and efficiency further dealer efforts should come from the dealers themselves. From idea to action is but a quick step for Mr. Rhodes, and accordingly the Indianapolis Branch Maytag Dealers' association was organized at an enthusiastic meeting of Maytag dealers at Indianapolis, May 6.

F. L. Maytag, president of the board of directors of the Maytag company, whose career is one of the remarkable merchandising successes of the age, was present to meet the new dealer organization. He expressed himself as greatly and pleasantly surprised at the overwhelming enthusiasm with which the dealers perfected the new organization and spirit of the token of cooperation pledged him.

The new Maytag Dealer association is at present operative only in Indianapolis Maytag territory comprising the states of Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky and Eastern Missouri, but it is anticipated that the new merchandising movement will spread to include not only the entire Maytag national dealer organization, but dealer organizations in other industries as well.

National officers elected at the Indianapolis meeting who will have charge of the welfare and progress of the new dealer association, both nationally and locally, are men prominent in merchandising circles and community affairs. They are as follows:

F. E. Davenny, Ashtabula, Ohio, National President Indianapolis Branch Maytag Dealers' association, also president of division B—a territorial unit of the Indianapolis Branch comprising Eastern Ohio.

T. F. Dixon, Indianapolis, Indiana, National Vice President Indianapolis Branch Maytag Dealers' association, also president of division C—comprising Northeastern Indiana, Northwestern Ohio and Southern Michigan.

Charles Kratsch, Chicago, Illinois, National Secretary and Treasurer, Indianapolis Maytag Dealers' association, also president of division D—comprising Northwestern Indiana and Northern Illinois.

H. R. Gustafson, Columbus, Ohio, National Chairman Operating, Program and Quotas committee, also president of division F—comprising Southeastern Indiana, Southwestern Ohio, Eastern and Central Kentucky.

A NEW WAY TO PLOW CORN.

On Wednesday, May 25, there will be a demonstration of the latest method of plowing corn, at the farm operated by George Seymour on the Darbyville pike a short distance from Circleville. This is the H. M. Crites farm formerly rented by Charles Weidinger.

It will well repay anyone to visit this demonstration and see the Moline-Fordson cultivator which is the simplest and most efficient corn plow outfit manufactured today. You will be given an opportunity to drive the outfit yourself.

HOW WOULD YOU LIKE TO BE SUED?

No man likes to be sued. The notoriety is unpleasant, to say nothing of the worry and concern. And the cost—even if the jury doesn't bring in a $20,000 verdict against you—may run into hundreds of dollars.

How much better to have someone assume all responsibility, defend any suit and even pay any verdict a jury may return against you!

Automobile liability insurance gives you just such assurance in event your car injures anyone.

Your Engine Is No Exception.

As it grows older it will wear. As it wears it needs a new lubrication diagnosis. Give it an oil of more body. Sinclair provides in the line of Sinclair Opaline Motor Oils several different grades of oils to serve the various clearances and degrees of wear encountered in all engines. Why not drive in and consult the Sinclair Recommendation Index, perhaps there is a grade of Sinclair Opaline Motor Oil better for your engine than the one you are now using.
